PREFACE.

The thoughts of Englishmen, and indeed of all the sons and daughters of the British Empire, have been occupied during this year with the present and the future rather than the past, and as The Genealogist deals only with the past this volume is likely to be consulted in quieter and, we have good reason to hope, in happier times than when the articles comprised in it were penned. The task of editing an antiquarian magazine during the greatest war known to history has not been an easy one, but my labours have been lightened by the kind assistance of many tried and valued friends, and I trust that their help may be continued in the year which is before us, and that other genealogists who can spare the time will do their utmost to maintain the reputation of The Genealogist.

Mr. W. H. B. Bird, in his article on Osbert the Sheriff, has with much success carried down the descendants of a Domesday tenant to the middle of the fourteenth century, and incidentally raises questions of some complexity which will in the future be sure to attract attention. I desire to express my thanks to Mr. J. Paul Rylands for the interesting old Pedigree Rolls which he has contributed, and for the Mardale Inscriptions. Mr. Bower Marsh's short paper on the Admission Register of the Freemen of London will interest all students of the City Records. Mr. Herbert Campbell, who is engaged in military duties, has been obliged to suspend for the present his series of articles on the Campbells of Duntroon. Mr. Reginald Boucher, notwithstanding that he is much occupied in war service, has most kindly undertaken to continue the Salisbury Marriage Licences, which, owing to absence from England,

Mr. Nevill has been obliged to abandon. My grateful thanks are also due to Mr. W. F. Carter, who has promised to compile the Index to the second volume of Mr. Glencross' transcript of Administrations in the Prerogative Court of Canterbury.

The frontispiece to this volume is a reproduction of a fine portrait, in the possession of the College of Arms, of Sir John Dugdale, the eldest son of the famous herald and antiquary. Sir John, who was born 1 June 1630, was appointed Windsor Herald in 1675 and Norroy in 1686, in which year he was knighted. On 8 December 1684 he was Deputy Garter to his father, and again at the Coronation of James II. He died at his house in Coventry, 31 August, and was buried at Shustoke, co. Warwick, 4 September 1700. The portrait shows him wearing the badge of Norroy and in the right-hand corner are the arms of Norroy impaled with those of Dugdale; it must therefore have been painted between 1686-1700.

OSBERT THE SHERIFF.

By W. H. B. Bird.

I.

The Half Century after Domesday.

Among the early Sheriffs of Lincolnshire and Yorkshire, of whom Mr. Farrer gave a succinct account in a recent issue of the English Historical Review,[1] was Osbert, who, as he has shewn, held office under William II and Henry I, in Lincolnshire circa 1096-1114, and in Yorkshire circa 1100-1114. This Osbert may be certainly identified with Osbern the priest, a Domesday tenant in chief in Faldingworth and Binbrook, and, jointly with one Ralph dapifer, in Marston, with soke in Barkston; also an under tenant of the Archbishop of York[2] in Benniworth. It is equally certain that he was the Osbert who held three bovates in Marston of the fee of Creon, and the Osbern William's man, who was tenant of William de Percy in Wickenby, with soke in Westlaby, Beckering, Reasby, Snelland and again Reasby, also at Reston and Carleton (Great and Little) near Louth in Lincolnshire, and at Scoreby in Yorkshire. The survey also shews an Osborn the Archbishop's man holding under the Archbishop in Easton, Osbern the Bishop's clerk under the Bishop of Lincoln in Southrey, Osbern the Earl's vassal under Earl Hugh in Stainton by Langwith, Well and Newbold, and an Osbern under the Countess Judith in Stapleford; but these holdings cannot, I think, be traced to the Sheriff or his representatives. Of Rufforth in the West Riding of Yorkshire, held under Osbern de Arches by Osbern his man, the same may be said; but Mr. Farrer, I notice, is inclined to identify the Sheriff with Osbern legatus Regis, claimant of Thurlby under the Countess Judith in the Clamores in Kesteven, where the context, it seems to me, points rather to Osbern de Arcis.

Besides the lands mentioned in Domesday, Osbert presumably had a residence in the city of Lincoln, for in a Lincoln chartulary[3] he is styled Osbert of Lincoln, and his son elsewhere Richard of Lincoln.[4] In the Testa de Nevill[5] is found the statement that he held three carucates in Cadeby (soke of Waltham), which were assigned in Domesday to Count Alan of Brittany; and in another place,[6] that the Bishop of Lincoln gave him to fee farm one carucate in Wickenby and Westlaby, and Reginald de Crevequer two carucates in Snelland, Swinthorp and Reasby, still held in both cases by his descendants at the date of that return. Mr. Eyton has observed[7] that so far as Reginald is concerned, the statement must be inaccurate, for it contains a palpable anachronism. We have evidence also that gifts were made by him to the Church of lands not hitherto mentioned. But these benefactions raise new difficulties.

First there is the gift of eleven bovates in Binbrook to form a prebend of Lincoln, for which licence was given[8] by William II. As to that I observe that the carucate in Binbrook assigned to Osbert in Domesday is among the lands still held by William his son at the time of the Lindsey survey. The text of another gift to Lincoln in the same chartulary[9] is corrupt. It runs: H. rex Angl' . . . . Sciatis me concessisse d'o . . . . . et Rob'to ep'o S'c'e Margarete et eccl'iam de Barsebi quas Osb'tus vicecomes dedit . . . . . A better text, from an Inspeximus of 2 Richard I,[10] reads: Ecclesiam Sancte Margarete et ecclesiam de Hatsebi, and Mr. Farrer (following Mr. Eyton) suggests that the churches of St. Margaret in Lincoln and Haceby are meant, dating the King's confirmation shortly after Easter 1116. Lastly, in the Coucher Book of Selby[11] may be found charters of Stephen and several succeeding kings confirming gifts made to the abbey, including Gunneby cum pertinenciis et terram de Duffield et Acastram cum pertinenciis quam Osbertus vicecomes dedit et Rogerus de Mulbray carta sua confirmavit. Now Osbert's descendants certainly had, or claimed to have, a mesne lordship in North Duffield, under the Bishop of Durham, with which Moubray had nothing to do, though I do not know that they had anything in Gunby, but there is no charter of Osbert's among the Duffield records[12] in the Coucher Book. The word quam (in the singular) therefore may be taken to limit his gift and Roger's confirmation to Acaster. The difficulty remains that the words of his charter[13] (no. Dlv) by which, styling himself Osbertus vicecomes de Everwyckescira, he gives Acastr' et quicquid habebam in eadem villa . . . . sicut melius habui de rege, seem to imply that Osbert was tenant in chief there, while the two charters of Roger de Moubray,[14] both dated some half a century later, make no reference to Osbert's charter, but appear, so far as the form goes, to be an independent gift of all the land in Acaster of Moubray's fee.

A charter of Henry I to Lincoln,[15] dated by Mr. Eyton about May 1111, shews that Osbert was dead, and that he had been rector of All Saints (Lincoln ?) and Grimsby at the time of his death. Mr. Farrer thinks it probable that he died before 1116. His death certainly took place before the date of the Lindsey Survey, which Mr. Eyton gives as 1111, Mr. Farrer as 1115—1118. This survey shews Osbert's lands in Lindsey in possession of his two sons, for, priest though he was, at that time the strict rule of celibacy was not yet enforced in regard to the secular clergy. Richard of Lincoln, whom I take to be the eldest, now holds Wickenby,[16] Benniworth, Reston and Carlton; another son, William Torniant or Turniant, holds Faldingworth and Binbrook. But Richard holds besides in Elsham a carucate under Hugh de Vallo, successor of Ilbert [de Lacy] the Domesday tenant, and three bovates in addition; in Welton in the Marsh two carucates under Gilbert, son and successor of Gozelin; a small mesne lordship in Huttoft; and seven bovates in Torrington under Geoffrey fitz Payn. William also holds five bovates in Nettleton, five bovates in Grasby, three bovates in Newton by Toft, and a mesne lordship in Aisthorp. Marston is in Kesteven. Two other members of the family now appear on the scene: Ralph the Canon, brother of Osbert, with a considerable holding in Dunholm under Alfreit de Chancy, successor there and elsewhere of Odo balistarius of Domesday, and William nephew (or grandson ?) of Osbert in Croxby.

[7] See British Museum, Add. MS. 31,930, ff. 62-64. It is interesting to note Mr. Eyton's methods, and the patient industry with which he pieced together the framework of a pedigree, before he became aware of the record to be cited hereafter.

It had occurred to me that Ralph the Canon was perhaps the Ralph dapifer of whose joint tenure in Marston Domesday supplies the only record. Mr. Eyton, however, believed the latter to be sewer to Gilbert of Gant, and an ancestor of the family of Kyme.[17] To this suggestion we shall have occasion to recur later. His canonry was perhaps not unconnected with certain covenants made by the Bishop with Osbert at the time of his gift of Binbrook already mentioned, the observance of which the King enjoined upon the Bishop by his charter of confirmation. Of William the nephew and his holding in Croxby I have no further knowledge.

The next record with which we have to deal is the Pipe Roll of 31 Henry I (1130-31). In the interval Richard of Lincoln has died, and William Torniant (as his heir) is responsible for money due from him to the king. He also owes a large sum of the old farm of Lincolnshire, having recently served as Sheriff of that county, it would seem; and 200 marks for the land of Adam, another brother, of whom nothing more seems to be known, and to whose possessions, large as they must have been, we have no clue. It appears also that several chief lords — Alan de Percy, Robert de Insula, and Walter de Gant in Yorkshire, Alan de Creon in Lincolnshire—have fined with the King in considerable sums in order to have again their lands held by William Torniant. Here Mr. Eyton's acumen seems for once to have failed him. He overlooks the obvious probability that these lands were in the King's hand for William's debts, and suggests that, in thus reclaiming his lands during his life time, the object of the chief lords was to oust him upon the failure of his heirs male, in order to prevent the succession of an heir general. Surely an arbitrary measure, which would never have been sanctioned by English law.

[16] Misread by Mr. Greenstreet as "Virhembi."

[17] See his MS. already cited, f. 59, where the descent of the Barons Kyme is discussed at length.

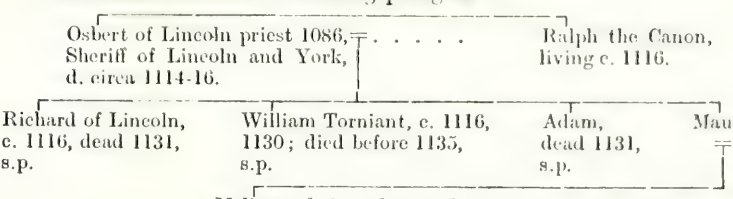
Not long after this, between 1130 and 1135, William Torniant must have died; for it fell to Henry I to dispose of his lands and his heir. The male issue of Osbert was then extinct, and the representation passed to his granddaughter Melisent. Mr. Eyton, too hastily again, assumes that she was "evidently" the daughter of Richard; but it was, in fact, through Maud her mother, daughter of Osbert, that the inheritance of her three uncles came to her. The proof of this, however, belongs rather to the next stage of my narrative. Her father's name I have not discovered.

Thus we arrive at the following pedigree:—



I may here mention, by way of caution, that an Osbert Vescunt, Sireve or le Sirgreve, and Ralph his son, occur at a later date in deeds of Welton le Wold.[18] I have also met with an Avice sister of Osbert the Sheriff, in a Register of the Sacristy of St. Neots,[19] but her probable date seems to be about 1230.

II.

Chamberlain of Wickenby.

It has long been known that Osbert was represented by the Chamberlains of Wickenby, for among the miscellaneous contents of the Abbreviatio Placitorum[20] happens to be the record of a suit of Easter term 11 John (1209), in which the descent was pleaded. Simon de Kyme having sued Robert Chamberlain for the land of Marston, the defendant produced a charter of Henry I, giving Herbert the Chamberlain to wife Melisent niece of William Turniant, with all the land of William, Richard his brother and Osbert the Sheriff their father, including Marston, to hold in chief. He also produced charters of the Empress Maud and Henry II, and writs in pursuance thereof, and finally appealed to the evidence of Domesday (rotulum Wyntonie). On this, Mr. Eyton's observation is[21]:

> It is my belief that the appeal to Domesday will have shewn the equal right of Simon de Kyme. For . . . . there is great reason to believe that Kyme, if not the lineal descendant of Radulfus dapifer, was the heir of Radulfus, and inherited from him not only land but his office of steward to the Barons de Gand.

[20] Page 65. See Curia Regis roll 21 (m. 6). The suit was begun years before; see Rotulus Cancellarie, 3 John, p. 187.

[21] Additional MS. 31,930, f. 62 (see also f. 59). It will be remembered that Osbert and Ralph dapifer were joint tenants of Marston in Domesday.

Mr. Eyton's argument may be summarised thus. In a charter of Gilbert de Gant, reported in the Abingdon Chronicle[22] and there dated about 1086, the first witness is said to have been Rodolphus dapifer Gilberti. Turning to Domesday, he found three manors of Gant's fee in which the under tenant is a Ralph, namely Aswardby, Croft and Hale. Two of these manors were afterwards held by the family of Kyme, in which the office of dapifer to Gant is said to have been at later periods hereditary[23]; but Hale was not. It is natural therefore to infer that the tenant of Aswardby and Croft was Ralph the dapifer, and that he was an ancestor, if not the direct ancestor of Kyme. On the other hand no Ralph was Domesday tenant of a manor in either Kime. The part of South Kime in Ashwardhurn Wapentake which belonged to Gant's fee was held by one Egbriht; and though it came afterwards to the Kymes, Mr. Eyton found no record of this tenure before 1275. Within twenty years from Domesday,[24] however, the other part of South Kime in Flaxwell Wapentake came to be held by Ralph de Kyme (or Ralph dapifer) under Robert Fitz Hamon.

Now in regard to Gant's under tenant the case is certainly a strong one; and it was no doubt tempting to go further, and identify the joint tenant of Marston as Gilbert's dapifer. But other households, no doubt, maintained a dapifer, and the name Ralph was not uncommon. If we are to suppose that Kyme's claim to Marston was founded upon the identity of this Ralph dapifer with some ancestor of his, all one can say is that he was very ill informed in regard to his supposed title. For instead of setting up the tenure in chief recorded in Domesday, he produced a charter of William Earl of Gloucester, rendering to Philip de Kime his land of Kime and Merston, as Ralph de Kime held it of Robert son of Hamon the Earl's grandfather, and of Robert the Earl's father; and a charter of Henry II, confirming to Philip all the lands he held of Gilbert [de Gaunt] Earl of Lincoln, and the land of Marston held by gift of William Earl of Gloucester.[25] At any rate, the plaintiff did not succeed, for Marston continued to be held by Chamberlain and his descendants.

Two Yorkshire suits give the pedigree more fully.[26] The same Robert Chamberlain in 1223, suing Thomas de Anesterne for a carucate of land in Houton,[27] pleads that William le Turneaunt at his death was seised thereof, that his right descended successively to Maud his sister, Mils[ent] her daughter, Stephen her son, and the plaintiff his son and [24] i.e., before the death of Robert Fitz Hamon in 1107. I am not clear on what Mr. Eyton relied for the statement following. If it was only the alleged charters of Henry II and the Earl of Gloucester mentioned below, the evidence for the fact is not beyond suspicion. His further difficulty that Ralph of Aswardby was a priest need not detain us.

[25] There were several lordships in Marston, but I have seen no other evidence that any part was held of the honour of Gloucester. The only Marston found in early inquisitions of that honour seems to be Marston Meysy in Wiltshire.

heir. A year later, suing Roger de Rodestem (Rudstane) for a carucate in Heiton,[28] he pleads that Melisent his grandmother was seised thereof in the time of Henry II, and traces his descent from her. Whether he succeeded in either case is doubtful, for it is more difficult to ascertain what land Osbert and the Chamberlains held in Yorkshire than in Lincolnshire. I have failed, for instance, to find any clue to the lands in Yorkshire held by William Torniant of Robert de Insula and Walter de Gant.

Who then was Herbert the Chamberlain? Some years ago I contributed to The Genealogist several papers shewing the value of the Kirkstead Chartulary as a record of Lincolnshire history in the twelfth century; and once more that Chartulary supplies the answer to my question, describing Herbert as Chamberlain of the King of Scotland.[29] In his introduction to the second volume of the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland, Dr. Burnett has given a list of the Scottish Chamberlains, in which he shews[30] that a Herbert held office under David I and Malcolm IV, circa 1130 to 1160, with a short interval circa 1138-9, during which one Philip occurs as Chamberlain. There may therefore have been two chamberlains named Herbert, perhaps father and son, though the office had not yet become hereditary, as it did before the end of that century. Or we may suppose a change of ministry, or simply that Herbert was absent in England for a time, on business perhaps connected with his wife's inheritance, and that Philip was his substitute or deputy. We have seen already that Herbert's marriage to Melisent took place not long after 1130, but I would suggest a doubt whether 1160 is the correct date of a charter of Malcolm witnessed by Herbert his Chamberlain, to which Dr. Burnett refers; for the deed of Stephen his son, from which my information is derived, bears date the last day of January 1159 (1160), and I take it to imply that Herbert was already dead.

Unfortunately the Chartulary does not enlighten us in regard to Herbert's parentage. It is a very remarkable coincidence, if merely a coincidence, that at this time Stephen son of Herbert was Chamberlain to the English King in succession to Herbert his brother; but I cannot identify the Scottish Chamberlain with any known member of that family. Again, one Herbert son of Aubri was a neighbour in Lincolnshire of Osbert and his sons, both in 1086 and at the time of the Lindsey survey: it would be tempting to conjecture that the Chamberlain was a descendant of his, and perhaps akin to the Veres. But if a descendant, he was certainly not the representative of that Domesday tenant. I find mention about this time in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire of a Herbert son of Dudeman and a Herbert son of Winund, but nothing to suggest that either of them was identical with Melisent's husband.

A VELLUM PEDIGREE-ROLL OF THE FAMILY OF DANYERS, alias DANYELL, OF THE COUNTY OF CHESTER.

This roll consists of a number of skins of vellum, fastened together with cement, and measures 14 feet 8 inches in length by 1 foot 10 inches in width. The coloured shields of arms, including the seven shields in Daresbury Church, number in all fifty-three, and beside these there are several pen-and-ink sketches of armorial seals and a large achievement of Danyers, mentioned below, which measures, over all, 1 foot 2½ inches in height by 11 inches in width. The arms are well drawn and painted throughout. Among the earlier descents there are a number of abstracts of documents, in neat seventeenth century handwriting, intended as evidences in support of the pedigree; some of these are curious and interesting, especially the undated challenge which Thomas Danyers, or Daniell, sent to Piers Legh of Lyme. This was the Piers Legh who was executed at Chester, by Henry IV, on the 10th August, 1399, as a loyal adherent of Richard II.[1] It would have been inconvenient to print these abstracts in the body of the pedigree; they are, therefore, printed below.

The original pedigree appears to have been drawn for Peter Daniell, of Tabley, the son and heir of Peter Daniell who died in 1575, and it was continued, in the early part of the eighteenth century, and brought down, through the family of Parker of Mobberley, to the children of Sir Charles Dukinfield, baronet, and his second wife, Sarah, the only child of Hewit Parker.[2]

The roll was copied in 1876 when it was lent to me by the late Mr. J. P. Earwaker.

FURTHER NOTES ON THE CAMPBELLS OF DUNTROON.

The documents belonging to Miss M. C. MacLachlan now claim our attention. Their length (one of them covers nineteen folio pages) prohibits anything more than an abstract of their contents, which I shall, therefore, proceed to give, under the title "Duntroon Inventory." I have arranged them in order of date; but it will be noticed that the originals from which Nos. 19, 14, 13 and 16 of the Raschoille Memoranda[10] were culled are absent, and I regret to say I have been unable to discover them, although I conclude that No. 13 is represented by the "loose paper" quoted by me in my former notes on the Campbells of Oib.[11]

Some of these documents, on the other hand, are not touched upon at all in the Raschoille Memoranda. To facilitate reference, where such correspondence does exist, I indicate the same at the end of each abstract.

Duntroon Inventory.

1. 26 July 1608. (Latin.)

   Sasine of Glasvar and Arnfad (2 merks 3*s.* 4*d.*) in the barony of Glasrie, sheriffdom of Argyll, by Alexander McEvir of Glasvar to his wife Anne Niclachlan in life-rent. Done before Archibald Campbell, notary public, clerk of the diocese of Argyll.

2. At Strones, 4 March 1610. (Latin.)

   Charter of Achachrome (9 merks), Crenan (2 merks) and Strones (2 merks) in the bailiary of Ariskeodnish, sheriffdom of Argyll, by Donald Campbell of Duntroon to his wife Anne Lamont in liferent. Reddendo: one penny at Pentecost as blensch duty. Written by George Loudoun, notary. Witnesses: Archibaldo Maclachlan de Craiginterriff, Colino Campbell meo fratre germano (i.e., of the grantor), Patricio McArthur meo servitore, Jacobo Kincaid et Georgio Loudoun notariis publicis.

   (A ratification by Archibald, Lord Lorne, is inscribed on the back of the parchment by George Campbell, Clerk of the Sheriffdom of Argyll, but was not executed; nor does the charter itself bear any evidence of having been sealed by Duntroon.)

[10] The Genealogist, N.S., vol. xxviii, pp. 106-108.
[11] Ibid., vol. xxviii, p. 31.

3. At Duntroon, 19 October 1625. (Latin.)

Charter of Raschoille (2 merks) in the bailliary of Ariskeodnish, sheriffdom of Argyll, by Donald Campbell of Duntroon to Patrick Campbell, his lawful son, and to Margaret, lawful daughter of Donald Campbell, baillie of Rothesay, future wife of the said Patrick, in conjunct fee, and to their heirs male, in implement of a Contract of Marriage of the same date. Also Charter by the same to his said son and his heirs male of the office of serjeandry or officiary of Ariskeodnish. Reddendo: amount not filled in. The lands and office to be held in fee. The precept of sasine is addressed to Niall Campbell of Oib. Written by John McGilchrist, son of Donald McGilchrist, notary public. Witnesses: Colino Campbell feoditario de Barbrek, Joanne Campbell ballivo de Rothesay, Magistro Jacobo Campbell de Strones meo filio (i.e., of the grantor), Roberto Campbell filio dicti Donaldi Campbell ballivi antedicti, et prefatis Donaldo et Joanne McGilchristis.

(The parchment has clearly borne Duntroon's seal, which is now, however, missing.)

4. 25 October 1625. (Latin.)

Sasine of Raschoille as above by Niall Campbell of Oib to Patrick Campbell, lawful son of Donald Campbell of Duntroon, and to John Campbell, baillie of Rothesay, as attorney for Margaret, lawful daughter of Donald Campbell, baillie of Rothesay, future wife of the said Patrick. Also sasine of the office of serjeandry or officiary of Ariskeodnish (by the giving of a wand) by the said Niall to the said Patrick. The above charter (No. 3) is fully quoted. Done before Donald McGilchrist, clerk of the diocese of the Isles. Witnesses: Donaldo Campbell ballivo antedicto, Roberto Campbell suo filio, Joanne McDonald Eog Vc . . . . . et Duncano . . . . . officiariis in Ardscoadneis.

(The document is much perished at the end.)

5. At Inveraray, 15 November 1659. (English.)

Charter of Raschoille and of the office of serjeandry or officiary of Ariskeodnish, as above, by Patrick Campbell of Duntroon, with consent of John Campbell, fiar of Duntroon, his eldest lawful son, to Alexander Campbell, second lawful son of the said Patrick and brother german of the said John, and to the lawful heirs male of the said Alexander—whom failing, to Alexander's younger brother german, Donald Campbell, and to his lawful heirs male—whom failing, to return to the grantor. The liferent of the lands is reserved to the said Patrick and to Margaret Campbell, his wife. To be held of the said Patrick and John and their heirs male in blensch fee. Reddendo: one penny yearly. The precept of sasine is addressed to Colin Campbell, brother german to Alexander Campbell of Inverlevir. Written by Nicoll Yuill (?), servitor to George Campbell, sheriff depute of Argyll. Witnesses: James Campbell of Ardkinglass, Alexander Campbell of Inverlevir, Colin Campbell his brother german, the said George Campbell and Nicoll Yuill, and Hew McNeill servitor to the said George Campbell.

6. 30 January 1665. (Latin.)

Sasine of Raschoille, as above, by Zachary McCallum of Poltalloch to John Polleick in Kilmichael in Glassary as attorney for Margaret, daughter of Colin Campbell of Blairintibbert, wife of Alexander Campbell of Raschoille, in liferent, narrating a precept of sasine addressed by Patrick Campbell of Duntroon and John Campbell, fiar thereof, Alexander's immediate superiors, to the said Zachary, and dated on the same day as the sasine was granted. Done before Donald McGilchrist, notary public. Witnesses: Donald Campbell of Narrachan, Donald Campbell, son of the said Patrick of Duntroon, and others.

Registered 7 February 1665 on fols. 185 and 186 of the eleventh book of the General Register of Sasines by Sir John Foulis, clerk to and keeper of the said Register, at the request of Mr. Alexander Campbell, writer in Edinburgh.

7. At Kilmichael, Glassary, 13 June 1667. (English.)

Wadset of the lands and island of Ellanmackasken in the parish of Kilmartin, sheriffdom of Argyll, by John Campbell of Duntroon, with consent of Margaret Campbell, "Lady Dountroone," his mother, liferentrix thereof, to Alexander Campbell, his brother german. The wadset price is £1,000 Scots. Warrandice: the 4 merkland of Ardiphurchastell in the said parish. To be held in free blensch. Reddendo: one penny Scots at Whitsunday. The precept of sasine is addressed to John Campbell in Raschoille. Written by John Stewart, Commissary Clerk of Argyll. Witnesses: Captain Colin Campbell of Blairintibbert, John Thomson, merchant burgess of Glasgow, George Thomson his son, the said John Stewart, Robert Steill, tailor in Kilmichael in Glassary, John McGilchrist lawful son of Donald McGilchrist, notary in Kilmichael, and Colin Campbell, messenger.

8. At Kilmichael, 25 February 1668. (English.)

Discharge by John Campbell of Duntroon to Alexander Campbell, his brother german, of all debts due by the said Alexander to the said John. Witnesses: Donald Campbell, brother german of the said John, John Stewart, Commissary Clerk of Argyll, the writer of the document, John Polleik, merchant in Kilmichael in Glassary, and John McCallum in Tilligar.

(Raschoille Memoranda, 5.)

9. (Place and date, with much of the final part of the document missing. It begins: "Charles be the grace of God King," and towards the end one can distinguish the words: "and of our reigne the twentie." The docket gives the year as 1669.) (English.)

Precept of poinding, narrating that, on 13 January 1663, Patrick Campbell of Duntroon, as principal, and Alexander Campbell, fiar of Raschoille, his second lawful son, as cautioner, granted a Bond for £100 Scots to Niall Campbell, lawful son of the deceased Duncan Campbell, alias McOnile VcPhatrak, sometime in Kilmartin. On 10 August 1668 the said Niall assigned the Bond to Niall Campbell, late Provost of Inveraray. The said Patrick of Duntroon being now dead and the said Alexander refusing payment, the precept is issued against the latter.

10. At Inveraray, 23 August 1670. (English.)

Compt fitted between Archibald, Earl of Argyll, and Alexander Campbell, brother to the Laird of Duntroon and Officiar of the Martayship of Ariskeodnish, for the year 1669-70. The total is £1,207. Therewith a discharge, dated as above, signed by the Earl and the said Alexander. There is mention of Alexander Ritchie, receiver of his Lordship's "victuall cropt," 1669 and 1670, and of one Robert Andrew, but without designation. Witnesses to the discharge: Niall Campbell, sheriff depute of Argyll, Hendrie Melis, servitor to Sir Colin Campbell of Aberuchill, and Donald Campbell, servitor to the said Niall Campbell.

11. At Ballimore of Kilmichael in Glassary, 27 January 1674. (English.)

Assignation of the reversionary rights over the lands and estate of Duntroon by John Campbell of Duntroon in favour of his second lawful brother german, Alexander Campbell, narrating that Niall Campbell, sheriff depute of Argyll, now stands infeft and seised in the said lands by right of apprisings, until a debt due to him (the amount of which is, however, omitted) be repaid. The assignor states that he is not himself able "at pñt to satisfie and pay" the amount, and that, as "thair may be danger in delaying any longer the payment thairof and sieing that failzieing of airis male lawfullie to be gottin of my owin bodie" the said Alexander is "nearest and aire male to me," he is prompted to take this step. It is stipulated that, if "it shall pleas God I have airis male lawfullie procreat of my owin bodie to succeid to me," Alexander shall yield up to such heir these reversionary rights, the heir paying him whatever he may have paid to the said Niall in redemption of the property; but if only daughters are born to the assignor, Alexander shall pay to them (or her) the amount provided in their (or her) mother's marriage contract. Written by John Stewart, Commissary Clerk of Argyll. Witnesses: Donald Campbell, lawful brother german to the assignor, John Campbell, lawful son of Colin Campbell, uncle of the assignor, and the said John Stewart.

(The reference to the mother's marriage contract probably quoted its date, but the document is badly torn at this point.) (Raschoille Memoranda, 3.)

12. At Inveraray, 13 February 1675. (English.)

Marriage Contract between Duncan Fisher, writer in Inveraray, and Mary, eldest lawful daughter of Walter Grahame. Witnesses: John Zuill of Darleith (?), and Niall Mc . . . . and Patrick Fishers, lawful brethren to the said Duncan Fisher, and Nicoll Zuill, brother to the said John Zuill.

(The attestation clause is much perished.)

13. At Kilmichael in Glassary, 9 November 1676. (English.)

Testament of Eouine (Hugh) Oig McThavish in Airdphuire Castell and inventory of the goods and geir pertaining to him and Issobell nein Donill chame, alias McLean, his wife, at the time of his death in 1675; given up by himself in his house at Airdphuire on 9 November 1675. Witnesses: Ar^{d}: Campbell, son to the Laird of Duntroon, Duncan McLauchlan in Kilmichael in Inverlussay, Duncan McCaueis in Ardphuir Castell, and Allan McDougall in Killchoan. Creditors: Christine McCallum, Christine McThavish, Angus McLaine, Duntroon, Margaret McOlbryd, wife of John McCallum, Marie McCallum in Kilmartin, and . . . . . McIllphadrick "for Iron." Legacies: to his wife a brown cow "called the pypar w^{t} hir quey and the wholl sheip," also "the Cheist the queirnes the pott pan and tangs" during her life; to Dougald McThaveis a two-year-old cow; to his foster (son), Alexander Campbell of Raschoille (who is named executor), the residue, except for half the household goods, which are left to the wife. It is stated that the Testator could not write his signature. Confirmed at above place and date by John Stewart, Commissary depute of Argyll, who appends his signature with that of John McGilchrist, "my Clark of Court for the tyme."

(Subsequently to his dispossession of the paternal estate, John Campbell of Duntroon is usually spoken of as "the Laird of Duntroon," while his supplanter is always called "Niall Campbell of Duntroon." It is probable, therefore, that John is the laird whose son witnesses the above—especially as John's brother had been fostered by the Testator. It is unlikely that one that had been connected by such intimate ties with the old family would have had any dealings with a member of the supplanter's family. As, however, we know (see No. 11) that John had no lawful issue on 27 January 1674, Archibald must have been his natural son.) (Raschoille Memoranda, 7.)

14. At Kilmartin, 28 January 1686. (English.)

Testament of Alexander Campbell of Raschoille, who "deceist in the moneth of January or y^{r}by 1685," given up by Margaret Campbell, his widow, in the name of Patrick, Niall, Duncan, Janet, Moir, Barbara and Margaret Campbell, their children. Debtors: Donald Campbell, sometime of Narrachan, as principal, and the Laird of Duntroon, as cautioner. Creditors: Archibald Maclachlan of Craiginterrive and Mr. William Maclachlan—the latter in respect of teinds. The Confirmation is signed by Zachary McCallum of Poltalloch, Commissary depute to Mr. Alexander McLean (Commissary Principal of Argyll), and by the Clerk of Court, J. Aickman.

(Raschoille Memoranda, 8.)

15. At Dunad, 31 December 1692. (English.)

Marriage Contract between Lachlan Maclachlan, brother of Allan Maclachlan of Dunad, and Janet Campbell, lawful sister of Patrick Campbell of Raschoille, with consent of her said brother and of Colin Campbell of Blairintibbert, her grandfather. The settlements on both sides are of some magnitude, considering the financial resources of Raschoille. Written by Mr. Dugald Campbell, son of John Campbell of Kildalloig. Witnesses: Archibald Maclachlan of Craiginterrive, Patrick Campbell of Rudill, John Pollick in Kilmichael, and John McGilchrist in Kilmichael (who inserted the date and names of witnesses).

16. At Kilmichael in Glassary, 17 January 1695. (English.)

Marriage Contract between Patrick Campbell of Raschoille and Barbara Campbell, lawful daughter of the deceased Archibald Campbell . . . . Campbell of Inverawe, with consent of John Campbell . . . . and Alexander Campbell of Kilmartin, her uncle. Patrick undertakes to infeft Barbara with an annual rent of £60 Scots out of his lands of Ellanmackasken and Raschoille, Patrick Campbell of Duntroon being his cautioner. The liferent rights of Margaret Campbell, mother of the said Raschoille, are reserved. The usual provision is made for children. The said John Campbell (who is later spoken of as Barbara's brother) undertakes to settle 850 merks Scots by instalments, the said Alexander of Kilmartin being his cautioner. Written by John McGilchrist, writer in Kilmichael. Witnesses: Patrick Campbell of Rudill, ..., son of the said Alexander Campbell of Kilmartin, John Pollock in Kilmichael, the said John McGilchrist, ... McKay in Doungaiive (?), and Donald Campbell in Corrillich.

(The document of which the above is an extract is not an original document, but appears to be a copy made from the original in 1888. It is docketed: "Copy Contract of Marriage betwixt Patrick Campbell of Raschoylie and Barbara Campbell his spouse, 1695 "; and the date "1888" is written beneath. The folio sheets on which it is written are joined along the margin in a manner usual with modern lawyers; and the whole appearance is quite modern.

The internal evidence, however, leaves no doubt that it is a meticulously exact copy of the original, laboriously made by some person that had very little acquaintance with old documents. Thus, he more than once writes "tother" for "tocher," and in one place he reads "yrto" (thereto) as "yato," which clearly puzzles him! The place Ellanmackasken, which would certainly have been described in the original as "the Isleand of Isleand Mackaisken," reduces the copyist to despair; for he reads it "Isleand of Isle and Mac . . . ." —and there he gives it up. The whole copy is full of similar errors; but it is noteworthy that, in each case, the error is due to a similarity between two letters, such as "c" and "t" followed by "h"—or else to some abbreviation or difficult name.

The signatures of the witnesses are given; but among them we find ". . . . Campbell feir of Islandrie."

In several places there are small gaps in the body of the document, showing where the copyist had failed altogether to read the original.)

(Raschoille Memoranda, 10.)

17. At Ellanmackasken, 2 March 1702. (English.)

Marriage Contract between Mr. Colin Campbell, minister of Ardchattan, and Margaret Campbell, widow of the deceased Donald Campbell of Barichebeyan. The bride's share of the settlement consists of two separate annuities settled on her by the terms of her marriage contract with the said Donald, dated at Ellanmackasken, 28 March 1689, and an additional annuity due to her by the said Donald's will, dated at Castle Craignish, 6 February 1697. Written by the said Mr. Colin Campbell, and a duplicate written by Donald Campbell, his son. Witnesses: Mr. John Darroch, minister at Craignish, Patrick Campbell of Raschoille, and the said Donald Campbell, son of the said Mr. Colin.

18. At Edinchip, 11 March 1702. (English.)

Assignation by Mr. William Campbell, minister of Knapdale, to Patrick Campbell, writer in Edinburgh, of debts due to him as follows:—£100 Scots from Mr. Dougall Campbell, late factor to the Laird of Auchinbreck; £280 7s. Scots from Patrick Campbell in Innerneill, also late factor to Auchinbreck; £83 6s. 8d. Scots from the deceased Archibald Campbell of Danna; and 300 merks, proportionally from these debtors, as "dammadges." Witnesses: Patrick Campbell of Edinchip, Duncan Stewart in Monachullmor, and Duncan McIntyre, officer to the Earl of Tullibardine. The docket on the back states that this assignation was presented (for registration?) by John Pollick on 22 December 1702.

19. At Inveraray, 9 July 1717. (English.)

Precept of poinding, narrating that, on 17 September 1712, Archibald Campbell in Teynalein, as principal, and Patrick Campbell of Rudill, as cautioner, gave a Bond to Archibald Campbell, messenger in Kilmichael, for 40 merks Scots. On 26 . . . . . 1714 the messenger assigned the Bond to the said Patrick Campbell of Rudill, who has failed to secure payment from Archibald Campbell in Teynalein, against whom, therefore, the precept is directed. It is issued in the name of John, Duke of Argyll, and signed by Archibald Campbell—presumably the sheriff clerk. The execution is indorsed by Duncan McPhune, sheriff officer, who states that he duly served it on 20 July 1717.

20. At Dalavich, 15 January 1724. (English.)

Assignation by Mr. Duncan Campbell, minister of Dalavich, narrating that his mother, Margaret Campbell, now wife of Mr. Colin Campbell, minister of Ardchattan, under date of 1 February 1721, assigned certain goods to the deceased Patrick Campbell of Raschoille, brother german of the said Duncan, and to the said Duncan himself; and in return the two brothers gave a discharge to the said Mr. Colin Campbell. Further, the brothers (presumably acting for their mother) assigned to the said Mr Colin a certain sum due to their mother in case she should survive her said husband; in return for which, the said Mr. Colin Campbell, as principal, and Patrick Campbell, his eldest lawful son, as cautioner, gave a Bond for 500 merks Scots to the brothers. This Bond the said minister of Dalavich, in his own name and as acting for Archibald Campbell, now of Raschoille, or other representatives of his said deceased brother, Patrick, now assigns to Duncan Campbell in Kilbride, husband of Margaret Campbell, sister of the said Patrick and Duncan, in return for a discharge of what is due to their said brother-in-law as tocher. Written by Duncan Campbell, writer in Lorne. Witnesses: Duncan Campbell, writer in Craig, and James Campbell, younger, of Drumdarroch.

(Raschoille Memoranda, 12.)

21. At Inveraray, 4 August 1737. (English.)

Testament of Mr. Duncan Campbell, minister of Kilmartin, signed by himself at his house at Glencharn (of which he held a tack) on 21 September 1736. Witnesses: Archibald McCallum, beadle in Kilmartin, and James Campbell of Rudill. James Campbell of Raschoille is named Executor, being nephew of the Testator. Legatees: the Testator's wife, Henrietta Campbell; his nephew, Mr. Daniel Campbell, son of Mr. Niall Campbell, minister of Colonsay; his nephew, John Stewart, son of the deceased Mr. Robert Stewart, minister of Lochaber (a modern pencil note adds the words "by Ann, my half sister"); the children of Daniel McGilchrist, writer in Kilmichael; Alexander and John Campbell, sons of the said minister of Colonsay; Duncan Campbell, son of Mr. James Campbell, minister in Seyle; Dugald Campbell, brother to the said James Campbell of Raschoille; Janet Campbell, sister of the said minister in Seyle; Marion, Barbara, Mary and Margaret, daughters of the said minister of Colonsay—Margaret getting more than her sisters; and the said James Campbell of Raschoille (residuary). A large sum is left to his wife for her life and thereafter in trust for the benefit of the poor of Kilmartin, the trustees being Niall Campbell of Duntroon, Archibald Campbell of Inverlevir, the said Mr. Niall Campbell, minister of Colonsay, Archibald Campbell of Blairintibbert, the said Mr. James Campbell, minister in Seyle, James Campbell of Rudill (who wrote the will), and the said James Campbell of Raschoille. A smaller sum is left to the poor of the parish of Dalavich and Kilchrennan, and another small sum each to Isobell and Ann, daughters of the deceased Niall Campbell, formerly Changekeeper in Slockvullin. The Testator desires to be buried with his ancestors in Kilmartin churchyard.

The testament was given up by Angus Campbell, writer in Inveraray, in presence of Mr. Archibald Campbell of Stonefield, advocate, sheriff depute of Argyll, at place and date as above. The document is stated to be a copy of the original, made by Peter Lindsay, Clerk Deputy, whose signature is added.

22. At Inveraray, 19 December 1737. (English.)

Precept of Clare Constat by Niall Campbell of Duntroon to James Campbell of Raschoille, as lawful and nearest heir to his grandfather, the deceased Alexander Campbell of Raschoille, in the 2 merkland of Raschoille and the office of serjeandry or officiary of Ariskeodnish. Witnesses: Angus Campbell of Asknish, James Campbell of Oib, James Campbell and Duncan Fisher, writers in Inveraray, and James Campbell of Rudill, writer of the precept. The docket states that James Campbell of Raschoille was son of Patrick, who was son of Alexander, who was son of Patrick Campbell of Duntroon.

(Raschoille Memoranda, 17.)

23. At Kilmartin, 14 February 1750. (English.)

Marriage Contract between Mr. Donald Campbell, minister in North Knapdale, and Mary, lawful daughter of Archibald Campbell of Jura, constituting a Trust for the benefit of the wife and issue of the marriage, the Trustees being the said Archibald Campbell, Duncan Campbell his son, and Archibald Campbell of Kenmore. Witnesses: Niall Campbell of Duntroon, the said Archibald Campbell of Kenmore, Alexander Campbell of Shirvan, Dugald MacTavish of Dunardery, James Campbell of Raschoille, and James Campbell of Rudill, writer of the contract. The bride signed at Ardfin in Jura on 8 March 1750. Witnesses: Mr. Archibald Lamby, minister of Kilmartin, and Niall MacNeill of Arichonan. A note at the foot, signed by the bridegroom at Inveraray, 4 August 1759, states that the tocher has been fully paid to him.

(Raschoille Memoranda, 18.)

24. At Inveraray, 3 April 1761. (English.)

Unexecuted deed of taillie of all his lands by James Campbell of Raschoille, narrating that, as Captain Niall Campbell of Duntroon, by a deed of even date, constitutes the said James his heir immediately after the heirs male of his own body, the said James nominates his heirs in the following order of remainder:—(a) his eldest son (whose name is not filled in) and the heirs male of his body; (b) the heirs male to be born to the said James by the present or any subsequent marriage, and the heirs male of their bodies; (c) the said Captain Niall Campbell and the heirs male of his body; (d) John Campbell, eldest son of the deceased Mr. Daniel Campbell, who was cousin german of the said James and formerly minister of Ardnamurchan, and the heirs male of his body; (e) Alexander Campbell, brother of the said John, and the heirs male of his body; (f) the nearest heirs whatsoever of the said James Campbell of Raschoille. Written by John Moir, apprentice to David Campbell, Writer to the Signet. Witnesses: John Campbell of Danna and John Clerk, writer in Inveraray.

(The document is of great length, but, though the names of the witnesses are filled in, neither they nor the principal have signed. Probably Duntroon never fulfilled his part of the bargain; or perhaps Raschoille's cousins objected to being named after Duntroon. The deed is of considerable interest in that it makes the most extraordinary and intricate provision against the alienation or forfeiture of the estate at any future date—such provision as would inevitably have ruined the estate in lawsuits! Raschoille later executed a more just and less litigious deed of taillie [see No. 27].)

25. At Duntroon, 4 November 1761. (English.)

Precept of Clare Constat by Niall Campbell of Duntroon to James Campbell of Raschoille, as heir to his grandfather, Alexander Campbell of Raschoille, who was son of Patrick Campbell of Duntroon, in the lands and office as in No. 22. Witnesses: Captain John Campbell, brother of Colin Campbell of Ederline, and John Davies, surgeon in Torblaren.

(This precept is almost word for word identical with No. 22, except that the docket does not give James' descent. Possibly the older precept had been mislaid, and this was issued in its place.)

(Raschoille Memoranda, unnumbered).

26. At Achadashenag, 21 January 1762. (English.)

Letter beginning "Dear Cousin," and terminating with the words: "I am, with the usual good wishes of the season to you, Mrs. Campbell & young folks, Dear Raschoillie, your affec. Cousin, John Stewart." From the contents we gather that the writer and addressee were guardians to the children of the deceased Mr. Donald Campbell, minister of Ardnamurchan, and that the former had just returned from that district, where he had been looking into some financial questions on behalf of the children. It appears, among other things, that the teinds of Ardnamurchan had, during the incumbency of Donald's predecessor, "Mr. Lachlan,"[12] been accustomed to be paid at different dates from those in vogue in other parts: and owing to this the children were likely to suffer much loss in respect of the annat.[13] There is mention of a Doctor McIntyre, and of a debt due to Raschoille by Lochbuie, who is stated to be in Edinburgh with his family, "where your agent may easily manadge him." The writer also mentions that the Presbytery of Mull is due to meet in Ardnamurchan early in March.

27. At Ellanmackasken, 31 August 1767. (English.)

Deed of taillie (duly executed) of all his property by James Campbell of Raschoille, nominating his successors in the following remainder:—(a) Alexander Campbell, his only son, and the heirs male of his body; (b) the heirs female of his body; (c) Barbara Campbell, only daughter of the said James, and the heirs male of her body; (d) the heirs female of her body; (e) John Campbell, [12] Lachlan Campbell, minister of Ardnamurchan, 1737-55.

[13] The portion of tithe due to the heirs of a deceased minister.

eldest son of the deceased Mr. Daniel Campbell, minister of Ardnamurchan, and the heirs male of his body; (f) Alexander Campbell, youngest son of the said Mr. Daniel Campbell, and the heirs male of his body; (g) the nearest heirs male of Raschoille himself. There is mention of a provision that had been made for Jean Fisher, wife of James, and for his said daughter. Witnesses: Angus Fisher of Thornfield and Duncan Campbell, writer in Inveraray, who drew up the deed.

(Raschoille Memoranda, 21.)

28. 13 August 1776. (English.)

Sasine of Raschoille (2 merks) by John Campbell, tailor in Raschoille, as baillie constituted by the precept of sasine, to Niall Campbell, tailor in Raschoille, as attorney for Niall Campbell of Rudill, narrating a sale of Raschoille by Alexander Campbell, only lawful son and heir of the deceased James Campbell of Raschoille, in favour of the said Niall Campbell of Rudill, dated the same day. Done before Claud Simson, notary public, clerk of the diocese of Glasgow. Witnesses: Duncan Stewart in Achadashenag in Mull and David Frigge, writer in Edinburgh. Registered at Dumbarton in the eleventh book (fols. 260 and 261) of the Sasine Register by Niall Campbell, keeper of the said Register, at the request of John Gray, messenger in Dumbarton.

29. At Dumbarton, 27 May 1783. (English.)

Admission of Alexander Campbell of Raschoille as Burgess of Dumbarton, in the presence of Lord Frederick Campbell, Provost of the burgh, James Colquhoun and Niall Campbell . . . ., baillies, Robert Gardner, dean of guild, and John Gray, treasurer. The document purports to be extracted by John McAulay.

30. At Inveraray, 17 June 1816. (English.)

Marriage Contract between Duncan Rankin, minister of South Knapdale, and Jane, eldest lawful daughter of the deceased Alexander Campbell, late of Raschoille. The bride brings into settlement a Promissory Note, dated 15 May 1816, by John Stewart at Achadashenaig for £326 sterling; and it is stipulated that all action for implement of the provisions in Jane's favour "shall pass at the instance of Peter Campbell, writer in Inveraray, Alexander Campbell, Lieutenant in the Royal Marines, Donald Campbell, Captain in the 17th regiment of foot, and Duncan Campbell, Lieutenant in the Royal Marines, her brothers german." Written by the said Peter Campbell. Witnesses: the Rev. Donald MacNicoll, minister of Killinan, and the said Peter Campbell.

EXTRACTS FROM REGISTER OF DEATHS AT THE CAPE OF GOOD HOPE, 1816-1826.

This list of British persons, who died at the Cape between 1816-1826, is extracted from the official Death Register kept in the Orphan Chamber. It is a continuation of the list which appeared in The Genealogist, N.S., vol. xxix, pp. 170-180, although not arranged similarly in columns. The names are arranged as follows :—Name of deceased, age (in some cases given in years, months and days, as "Banyard, William, 29-6-25"), occupation or profession and date of death. The place names in brackets, as "At Stellenbosch," denote that the death occured there and not Cape Town, as the others indicate. As some of the birth places appear to be inaccurate in the register, I have kept the original spelling and placed a query mark after them. The footnotes are mine.

Notices of Books.

[It is requested that all books for review be sent direct to the Editor, H. W. Forsyth Harwood, Esq., 15, Rugby Mansions, Addison Bridge, Kensington, London, W.]

A Calendar of Norwich Deeds enrolled in the Court Rolls of that City. Norwich (Goose & Son, 1915).

The Calendar of deeds, of which the first portion, edited by the Rev. W. Hudson and Mr. Walter Rye, was published in 1903, is here taken from 1307 to 1341, under the auspices of Mr. Rye, whose zeal in printing Norfolk records, or making them accessible and useful, is well known. His interesting preface deals chiefly with the names and trades of the persons mentioned. In the list of unusual female names, Gabina seems to be rather an error for Sabina than for Galiena as Mr. Rye suggests. Capital letters are ever a stumbling-block. Of women "who kept their own names after marriage," twelve are noted. Remembering Weller's Rule, we should have expected more, for these are really widows (more properly "relicts"), retaining, as was then customary, the names of their former husbands. A woman changed her name once on marriage, but not again. If her first husband had a name she could not take, such as fitz John or fitz Simon, mere patronymics, she took that of her second husband—if she married again—with a like saving. Mr. Rye has compiled a Black List of all the foreign names occurring, which, however, as he admits, is a little too extensive. Brabant, Burdeaus, Burgonyoun, Picard, and many others, are of course unmistakable. But Nicholas de Lymbery, the parson of Bracon Ash, doubtless hailed, not from the Duchy of Limburg, but from Limbury, co. Beds., or from Limbergh (now Limber), co. Lincoln, from which latter place came Adam de Limbergh, clerk, a well-known person, who "flourished" at this very time. Copyn, Topping, Thornekyn, Ridekyn, Slabbard, seem English enough, and is there any place called Arderne "somewhere in France"?

Dwelly's Parish Records. Vol. IV. Bishops' Transcripts at Wells. Vol. III. Copied from the Originals by E. Dwelly, F.S.G., and T. W. Dwelly. Herne Bay (printed and published by the Author).

This volume contains all the transcripts not hitherto printed in this series of ten Somerset parishes, viz., Abbas Combe, Aisholt, Alford, Aller, Allerton, Almsford, Angersleigh, Ashbrittle, Ashcott and Ashill. Advantage has been wisely taken of the issue of a third portion of these valuable records to correct misreadings of surnames which occur in the two previous volumes, while several names illegible in the originals have been supplied from the parochial registers. That there should have been errors is not surprising, for the transcripts were often written in a very crabbed and difficult handwriting, and in addition time has done its work, the ink being much faded. In the present volume it may be doubted whether "Brine" on p. 34 should not be "Brice," and if the John "ffenneiss" who signs as rector of Almsford in 1598-9 is not identical with John "ffennell," rector there a few years later, and who is to be found on the next page. In some cases the difference in spelling is, of course, merely due to a variant of the same surname, for instance the incumbent of Angersleigh in 1605-6 occurs both as "Lye" and "Leighe."

Mr. Dwelly, in his introductory remarks, appeals for information as to the existence of Archdeacons' transcripts for Taunton, and suggests that some of the duplicates which have been found at Wells are the remains of the Archdeacon's copies for Wells, which may very probably be the case.

FLEETWOOD FAMILY RECORDS. Collected and edited by R. W. Buss. Part III. (Privately printed.)

An interesting account of that eccentric man of fashion, Charles Fleetwood, who in 1734 obtained five-sixths of the Drury Lane Play House patent, is the most important item in this portion of the Fleetwood Records. Part III also contains "Extracts from the Registers in Dr. Williams' Library," which are among the Dissenting Registers at Somerset House; a Royal Descent of the Fleetwoods of Calwich and Penwortham; and the Fleetwood entries from the Registers of the Reformed Dutch Church, New York. There is also a description of a sixteenth century ebony cabinet, which once belonged to Bridget Fleetwood, daughter of Oliver Cromwell, its present whereabouts being unknown.

Notes and Queries.

BEVERLEY AND LAYTON FAMILIES OF CO. YORK.—Information is desired concerning names of the parents of Major Robert Beverley, of Yorkshire, who was born 1615-1630, emigrated to Virginia 1663, married 1666, and died 1687. A gentleman of wealth, a counsellor by profession, and Acting Governor of Virginia colony. An ardent Royalist. His son, Robert Beverley, Junior, wrote the History of Virginia. William Beverley, son of Robert, Jr., born 1698, died 1766. He married Elizabeth Bland, and at his death left an estate of over £300,000. A wax impression of his Arms is identically the same as those of John Beverley on page 645, Foster's Visitation of Yorkshire. His son removed to Yorkshire from Virginia and left a son, whose descendant, Robert McKenzie Beverley, left a daughter, married to . . . Fowler, and had issue, R. M. Fowler, of London. Another descendant, Maria, married Edmund Beckett, who assumed name of Beckett-Denison.

Information is also desired concerning the ancestry of Thomas Layton, of Cleasby, co. York, whose daughter, Frances, married George Robinson, of Cleasby. This George Robinson died 1634, and Frances his wife died 1648.

DURNFORD OF DURNFORD, CO. WILTS.—I shall be glad to learn something of the family of Durnford, of Durnford, Wilts, where anciently they held vast estates.

Are there any known present day representatives? I rather incline to think their lands passed into the female line by failure of direct male heirs, or were confiscated. The name occurs at Durnford in the eighteenth century, perhaps does so still.

(1). In the twelfth century Roger Durnford, of Durnford, owned no less than seventeen mills.

(2). In the thirteenth century, A.D. 1278, Sir William Durnford, of Durnford, was probably Roger's descendant.

(3). In the fifteenth century William Durnford, of Somerset, died possessed of several manors, one was Merton. His wife was Matilda de Fauconberge. (I.P.M.)

(4). In the sixteenth century William Durnford, of Somerset, lived at North Cadbury, where there are still lands called "Durnford's grounds." Possibly he descended from the preceding (No. 3), especially if "Durnford's grounds" are part of the above manors.

William Durnford, of North Cadbury, is my ancestor. Early in the seventeenth century the family moved to Andover, Hants.

It seems not improbable that all the preceding proceed from Roger Durnford. His estates would easily have included Andover, and perhaps also Merton, etc., and North Cadbury.

There was at one time (sixteenth century?) a "Lord Dunford" (possibly a misprint for Durnford) of the Scots College in Paris.

Is the origin of the name known? According to Magna Britannica, it appears to be derived from a village of the name in Normandy. I have not yet found it on any map. I surmise it was Orneford, the ford of the Orne (eagle) river. It is significant that Sir William Durnford had the eagle for his crest. He may have been related to Durnfords who received grants of land in Devon and Cornwall, for their services at Hastings. They are ancestors of the Earls of Mount Edgcumbe.

In England the family would naturally style themselves d'Orneford. I believe there is a family in England of the name Dornford.

The derivation may however be from "dern" = secret or hidden. In olden times the name was sometimes spelled "de Derneford."

Chamberlain of Wickenby.

Whether owing to the paucity of materials remaining for the history of that time, or to the fact that his life was spent mostly in Scotland, Herbert the husband of Melisent remains merely a name so far as English records go. But of Stephen Chamberlain his son many traces are found. He appears in the Pipe Rolls first in 11 Henry II (1164-5), when he accounts for 30*s.* 6*d.*, and fines for a writ of right. As a Yorkshire knight he made a return among the Carte of 1166, shewing that he held one knight's fee in chief, one carucate and six masure being in demesne, and that William de Scuris was his largest under tenant, while William de Berville and Thomas the clerk of Wichetona had smaller holdings under him. He was also returned as holding two knights' fees under William de Percy of old feoffment, and one knight's fee under Maurice de Creon (Crohom)—a feoffment made by that lord's father after the death of Henry I.[31] His name is found among those paying scutage in Lincolnshire or Yorkshire in 14 and 18 Henry II and 2 Richard I (1167-8 to 1190-1)[32]; but four years later his son's name occurs instead. The Pipe Rolls from 11 to 22 Henry II (1164-76) shew him engaged in litigation with the Abbot of Peterborough for one knight's fee in Lincolnshire, and those from 22 to 24 Henry II with Helte de Boisdele. He was probably cast in the latter suit, for in the next roll there is mention of his misericordia.

As Stephen de Wikinkebi Chamberlain he gave to Kirkstead Abbey all his land in Westlaby, adding 10 acres of land and 5 acres of meadow in Snelland in recompense for service due to Roger de Beningworth, and covenanting to acquit the Abbey of service due to the Earl of Warwick. This gift is accordingly confirmed by William (de Novo Burgo) the Earl, and by Maud his Countess, who was one of the heirs of Percy the chief lord.[33] An indenture providing for indemnification of the Abbey in case the heirs of Stephen fail in their warranty,[34] contains this clause :—

> Preterea si forte non poterunt warantizare eis pasturam de Westladebi contra vicinos per illam libertatem que dicitur horn wyderhorn, dabunt eis in campis de Wykvngbi pasturam ad CC oves per maius centum.

For further security the donor made a conveyance of all his demesne in Wickenby except his dwelling house, a grove, and a meadow called Woodsike (Wdesic).[35]

In January 1160, which must have been very soon after the death of Herbert his father, we find him confirming a gift made by Gregory de Sunthorp of half a carucate in Swinthorp fields, with meadow in proportion, the site for a house, and pasture in Swinthorp and Snelland. Many years later he confirms all the Abbey had in Snelland at Easter 1187, and in Dunholm.[36] Among the donors in Snelland was a Ralph son of Stephen, who was perhaps his own son[37]; while in Dunholm Thorold de Nevill had given half his lordship with one bovate and a toft in addition. Another donor there was Reinald Pedeken, whose name is elsewhere translated into Hundefot.

There is incidental mention in this chartulary that Stephen had given the church of Snelland to Barlings Abbey, making certain reservations concerning pasture in Westlaby.[38] Elsewhere it appears that he gave a bovate in Marston to Haverholme Priory.[39]

Stephen was succeeded by Robert Chamberlain his son, who first paid scutage in both counties in 1194-5.[40] No doubt he was the person whose scutage was remitted in 1205, and who in that year was taken prisoner at Chinon in Touraine with Hubert de Burgh; for two years later he has licence to pledge his land of Wickenby for his ransom.[41] At the close of King John's reign he was one of those whose lands were seized, Marston being given to Philip le Arcevesk; but in 1217 he returned to his allegiance, and his lands in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire were restored to him.[42]

At the great Inquest of 1212 for Lincolnshire,[43] Robert Chamberlain is returned as tenant in chief of six carucates in Marston by the service of one knight, rendering further to the heirs of Creon the service of one twelfth of a knight's fee for lands held of his gift by the Canons of Haverholme. The quantity mentioned is six bovates, which is double the quantity originally held of Creon by Osbert. In Wickenby and Westlaby the heirs of Osbert the Sheriff (Robert's name not being mentioned) are tenants of three carucates of the fee of Percy by the service of one knight, and farmers of one carucate under the Bishop of Lincoln, also of two carucates in Snelland, Swinthorp and Reasby under Crevequer; but in Reston and Carleton the tenants under Percy are "homines Osberti." In other words, there has been sub-infeudation here. This, however, is not a complete account of Robert's interests in the county. The Memoranda Rolls of the Exchequer in 6 Edward III shew that he was then guardian of the heir of Adam de Asceby or Acceby, which may mean Haceby where Robert's son and successor will be found to hold a mesne lordship; but there were tenants in Marston named Askeby.[44]

Mention has already been made of several suits at law in which Robert Chamberlain was concerned. He successfully defended his title to Marston, but was less fortunate when Lambert de Busseto claimed the advowson in 1210[45]; for he had to admit the last presentation by Hugh de Busseto, father of Lambert, while pleading that it was unlawfully made during a time of civil disturbance, and that the claimant had no interest in the manor. It would seem, however, that the judgment in plaintiff's favour was afterwards reversed. The Curia Regis rolls shew that in 7 Henry III and later there was litigation concerning property in North Duffield between him and Peter de Maaley and his wife. From the Fine Roll of 1223 we learn that he was claiming the wardship of Ralph son of William Chamberlain in Lincolnshire.

Two charters of Robert Chamberlain are among the Lincoln Cathedral Charters printed by the late Mr. Massingberd. One is a gift of two tofts, two bovates of land and a meadow in Marston, the other confirms the gift of a toft and one bovate in Snelland made by Geoffrey son of Bertram. He made a number of charters to Kirkstead, confirming the gifts of Stephen his father, Geoffrey de Sunthorp, Simon de Horbeling, Bertram, and Ralph son of Stephen de Wibreton in Westlaby, Swinthorp, Snelland and Reasby, and of Thorold de Neville and Reynold Pedechen in Dunholme.[46] His charters of meadow land in Wickenby and Buslingthorpe[47] perhaps represent benefactions of his own. The gift of six bovates in Marston to Haverholme will be found in Gervase Holles' transcript or extracts from a Haverholme chartulary,[48] where it appears[49] that the gift was made originally to the Prioress and Convent of Greenfield, and by them conveyed to Haverholme. His charter gives security against any claim for dower by Alice his wife. By other charters he gives one bovate, and again two bovates in Marston,[50] and he witnesses charters of William and Robert de Moubray.

In this MS.[51] is copied also a charter of Robert Chamberlain, witnessed by William of Ely the King's Treasurer, giving to Jordan de Esseby half a carucate of land in Marston, formerly held by William de Fillingham, charged with the foreign service of one knight's fee. A confirmation of this gift, dated 28 December (1213), is on the Charter Roll of 15 John, which confirmation includes a further gift of Marston mill, with the mill pond, the suit of the men of Chamberlain's fee, a holm below the mill and a toft in Marston. From an inspexímus of 1337[52] it would seem that the grantee was the same person as Jordan de Askeby, who gave to Haverholme half a carucate of land and two tofts in Marston, and four bovates besides.[53] The gifts of Robert Chamberlain are also to be found recorded there.

The latest notice I have seen of Robert Chamberlain was in the suit already mentioned of Michaelmas term 1224. In 1225 he was dead, and Henry Chamberlain his son had livery,[54] doing homage for one knight's fee in Lincolnshire. Robert left a widow Alina or Aelina, who in 1226 was suing for dower in Wickenby, Marston, Snelland and Reston.[55] Henry the son had respite of taking knighthood in 1229, and again in 1233[56]; but occurs later as a knight. In the Kirkstead Chartulary he is found, I think, only as a witness.[57] In 34 Henry III (1249-50) he was suing Jordan de Menythorpe for lands in North Duffield.

From the Testa de Nevill[58] we learn that in 1235 he paid the collectors in Kesteven only 13*s*. 4*d*. towards the aid for marrying the King's sister, when a knight's fee was assessed at 2 marks. The return made a few years later puts his holding in Wickenby at one half and one thirteenth of a fee,[59] and that of Marston at two thirds of a fee.[60] Peter de Bervil held one sixth of a fee under him in Faldingworth, and Emma de Cressy under Bervil.[61] Of Parnell de Creon he held four bovates in Avelund Wapentake (the actual possessor being John Hauteyn, who held of Robert Hauteyn, and he of Robert de Thorp, and he of Chamberlain); one fourteenth of a fee in Dembleby, where Henry de Lekeburn was his under tenant; one tenth of a fee in Haceby, Robert de Thorp under tenant; one sixth of a fee in Newton and Threckingham, William Pedechen under tenant; one bovate in Kelby, and one tenth of a fee in Swarby, Robert de Thorp under tenant; half a fee (with some deduction) in Haydor, Richard Thuschet under tenant; and one tenth of a fee in Somerby, where his under tenant was Adam de Longgam.[62] Besides Wickenby, he held of Percy two thirds of a fee in Little Carlton, John Cormaleys under tenant, and one fourth of a fee in Reston and Carlton, of which William Chamberlain and Henry de Lekeburn were under tenants.[63] And of Cicely de Crevequer he held two thirds of a fee in Welton, Walter de Welleton being there his under tenant.[64]

The Yorkshire return shews him to have been tenant in chief of a knight's fee in Acklam and Leavening and one fourth of a fee in Wharram, but in another place these appear to be held under Percy.[65] His lordship in North Duffield under the Bishop of Durham is ignored. This return may be supplemented by Kirby's Quest,[66] in which Chamberlain's heirs are said to hold of Percy six bovates in Gate Helmsley, Walter de Hemelsay under tenant; the town of "Pontebell" (i.e. Stamford Bridge), Robert de Percy under tenant; and six carucates in Scoreby, with Robert again under tenant, and Anthony Bek under him. In North Duffield six carucates and two bovates are returned as held by Robert Salvayne of the Bishop of Durham; but the return adds that this estate used to be held, and ought in law to be held of Chamberlain's heirs, and by them of the Bishop.[67]

Sir Henry Chamberlain died before 28 March 40 Henry III (1256). The inquisition[68] taken upon a writ of that date, addressed to the sheriff of Lincoln, shews that he held in chief a capital messuage, eleven and three quarter bovates of land, three tofts, a several pasture and a rent of 2 lb. of pepper payable by Jordan de Esseby in Marston by the service of finding one knight in the King's army. Of Thomas Grelley he held two marks of rent[69] by the service of a pair of gilt spurs. Of Henry de Percy a capital messuage, thirteen bovates of land and four tofts in Wickenby, besides five bovates there held of the Bishop of Lincoln; also of the fee of Percy rents of 1 lb. of wax payable by William Brand, and 3*s.* 4*d.* payable by Stephen de Lund, besides a wood there of considerable value. It is singular that the inquisition lumps the service due to Percy in Wickenby with that due for Dufeld (evidently Duffield co. York), together two and a half knights' fees, as if both were held of Percy, though the other evidence goes to show that the latter was held of the Bishop of Durham. Lastly there is mention that he gave a bovate of land (in Buslingthorpe ?) to the nuns of Stainfeld, for which he used to pay 16*d.* a year rent to Richard de Buselingtorp, and now pays 4*d.* a year to the nuns. No Yorkshire inquisition remains, though we have a writ of diem clausit extremum.[70]

Sir Henry left a widow Lucy, whose name will be found in that writ, and in the Calendar of Patent Rolls for the same year. In 1258 and 1259 Walter his son is pardoned for the manslaughter of John de Elynton, or John Bere of Elynton.[71] Michael son of Henry Chamberlain, who fines for an assize in Yorkshire in 1272, may have been another son.[72] John Chamberlain, the son and heir, was in his twenty first year at the date of the inquisition. He was perhaps the John Chamberlain who had a patent of protection in 1260.[73] In 1261, at the instance of the Queen of Scotland, a grant was made him of free warren in Wickenby and Marston; and, with the exception of his confirmation of the gifts made to Haverholme Priory by his ancestors,[74] that is all that I have to tell of him. A patent of 28 April 1266 shews that he was then dead; and in Michaelmas term of that year Cicely his widow recovered dower of 500 acres of pasture in Westlaby against the Abbot of Kirkstead, of land and rent in Marston against William de Ingelham, and of a rent of cumin in Wickenby against William Swon. She was also suing William Chamberlain for dower of a toft and land in Marston, the Prior of Haverholme and Robert Faukes for dower of rents there.[75]

The inquisition after his death,[76] which was not taken until 1273, is in fact an extent of Wickenby, making no mention of Marston or any Yorkshire lands. His demesne is returned as a capital messuage and twenty bovates of land (ten acres to the bovate) held of Sir Henry de Percy, doing only foreign service, and five bovates of the Bishop of Lincoln at a rent of 20s. The return then adds that there are in the town eighteen and a half bovates held in villenage, each owing nine days' work, the total value of such work being 13*s.* 10½*d.*, nine cottars paying 18*s.* a year, whose autumn work is valued at 18*d.*, two freeholders at a rent of 1 lb. of wax and 1 lb. of cumin respectively, a windmill valued at 12*s.*, and a wood at 6*s.* 8*d.* The deceased had two daughters, one of whom is dead; the survivor is his heir, and is fifteen years of age. Her name is not given. In 1274 the heirs of John Chamberlain are found to have held of Henry de Percy one knight's fee in Wickenby, Welton by Haumby, Somerby, Little Carleton, North Reston and Ludford.[77]

About this time one Philip de Lindsey appears on the scene. The first mention I have of him is as champion for the demandants in a judicial duel before the justices at Northampton in 1271, when either he or his cause was so unpopular that, as both combatants lay prostrate on the field, the bystanders broke the barriers and mobbed him. His cries for mercy caused him to be accused of recreancy, but the justice's certificate did not sustain that charge.[78] No doubt he was of the Scottish house of Lindsey; for in 1310 he was one of the mainpernors for the loyalty of Alexander de Balliol,[79] and in 1316 (after Bannockburn) he was in rebellion—"adhering to the Scots." Previously, in 1313, he received a pardon for his part in Lancaster's rising and the death of Piers Gaveston.[80] But what concerns us now is that, in the interval, he is found in occupation of the Chamberlain estates. In 9 Edward I, with Beatrice his wife, he answers a writ of quo warranto, and defends certain rights and liberties in Marston and Wickenby, pleading in support of his free warren the grant to John Chamberlain above mentioned.[81] In 12 Edward I he recovered the rent due from Grelley in Bloxholme, now put at 12*l.*[82] A return of 1303 shews him holding two thirds of a knight's fee in Marston in chief, and in Wickenby under Percy one half and one thirteenth of a fee, formerly held by Henry Chamberlain.[83] In 35 Edward I it is found that Robert de Merston held land of him in Marston; in 5 Edward II that Walter de Glocestre held of him messuages and land in Culverthorp and Swarby and in Haydor; in 8 Edward II that he held eight carucates in Wickenby of Henry de Percy by the service of one knight's fee.[84]

So far these records have not disclosed Lindsey's title. Later inquisitions, taken in 9 and 10 Edward II, shew that he was tenant by the courtesy of England after the death of Beatrice his wife, holding Wickenby and Marston of the heritage of John son of Robert Chamberlain, a minor in ward to the King.[85] We may safely infer that Beatrice was the unnamed daughter of Sir John Chamberlain, that he had issue by her, but that none now survived. Consequently these lands did not become an escheat by his rebellion, though his goods at Wickenby were seized and sold.[86] It was found that he had none at Marston, having made a demise of that manor.[87]

Robert Chamberlain, father of the new heir, was of Drax in Yorkshire, where about the year 1287 he acquired an estate from John Paynel, after whose death Philip Paynel, as heir to his brother, confirmed it by fine in 1293.[88] In 1295, before his departure for Gascony with Henry de Lacy Earl of Lincoln, Robert made a settlement of the manor of Drax upon himself and Parnell his wife and upon their heirs, John Luterel being his feoffee.[89] He occurs as a knight in the Close Rolls of 1299 and 1310. In May 1312 he was one of the commissioners appointed to stop the passage between York and Hull by the rivers Ouse, Derwent and Humber,[90] but was dead before 8 October that year, when a writ issued upon complaint of Parnell his widow that the escheator had seized the manor of Drax regardless of her jointure.[91] She did not long survive her husband, but died before 12 November,[92] John their son and heir being then eleven years of age. The manor of Drax was valued at 28*l.* 5*s.* 7¾*d.*, and was held by the service of half a mark, with ward and marriage upon occasion.[93] Parnell was perhaps of the family of Bayeux or de Baiocis, for Henry de Baiocis, described as his "cousin," will be found acting as her son's next friend.

Sir John Chamberlain of Drax was born at Drax on St. Margaret's eve (19 July) 1301, and baptised there next day.[94] He was thus about forty three years younger than Beatrice Lindsey, nevertheless there is evidence that they were of the same generation. In 1333 John Chamberlain sued the Abbot of Roche for a messuage and thirty two bovates of land in Roxby by Burton Stather, counting that Robert his ancestor was seised of the premises in King John's time, and that they descended successively to Henry his son and heir, John son and heir of Henry, who died without issue according to this record, to Robert brother and heir of John, and to the plaintiff as son and heir of the last mentioned Robert.[95]

During his ten years' minority John and his lands were the subject of much bargaining. The King originally committed his wardship and marriage to Hugh le Despenser, who sold them to John de Sandale one of the King's clerks, and he again to William de Ayremynne another King's clerk.[96] Ayremynne sold the wardship of Drax to Walter de Gosewyk, and he, early in 1316, to Master John de Snaynton.[97] Until Saturday after St. Valentine's day that year, when he was delivered up to William de Ayremynne,[98] the boy himself had been left with Henry de Baiocis, to whose care he was entrusted by the Exchequer officials during the King's pleasure. It appears that the King owed money to Gosewyk, who was a burgess of Berwick upon Tweed; and the debt having been paid by Ayremynne, in August following the King gave him the wardship of Wickenby and Marston, which had then accrued to his ward by Lindsey's rebellion[99]; Ayremynne being directed, out of Lindsey's chattels in Wickenby, to pay costs incurred by Henry de Baiocis some years before in tallaging the cities and boroughs of Lincolnshire, Rutland and Northamptonshire.[100] Lindsey had placed certain evidences of title in the hands of one of the Friars Minor at Lincoln, and in August 1317 an order was made that the Warden of the Friars should go through the documents in the presence of Ayremynne and de Baiocis, and give them up to the latter for the heir's use.[101] In February the King had presented to Marston as in his gift because of his wardship of the heir,[102] notwithstanding the judgment in 1210 already mentioned. In 1320 a writ of amoveas manum in regard to the lands of Gerard Salveyn excepts the Manor of North Duffield, which he held of Chamberlain the King's ward[103]; but another inquisition says that the manor is held of the Bishop of Durham, and that the deceased held nothing of Chamberlain's heir. There was a similar conflict of evidence in 1317 in regard to the estate of Thomas de Neville in Faldingworth. Writs of livery north and south of the Trent issued on 24 July 1322; and the next day John Chamberlain entered into a recognisance in Chancery in favour of his guardian, as he did again nearly two years later.[104]

Sir John occurs as a knight in 1332, when for the second time he enters into a recognisance to the Bishop of Norwich.[105] In December 1343 judgment was given against him in the Court of Common Pleas in regard to the advowson of Marston, the King's attorney pleading that it came to the King by reason of his nonage, and had not been sued out of the King's hand.[106] But although the King seems to have made a second presentation at this time, and in spite of the record of 1210, and of a presentation by Stephen Chamberlain alleged in this plea, in February following the King revoked his presentation, and accepted the claim of Robert Flemming parson of Hougham that Marston was merely a chapelry of Hougham, the Bishop certifying that search had been made, and that no presentation or admission to the church of Marston could be found.[107]

The return of 1346 shews John Chamberlain holding Marston in chief as two thirds of a knight's fee, and Wickenby of Percy as the moiety and the thirteenth part of a fee.[108] Of Marston he had licence first to make a grant to Roger de Wolsthorpe (or Wolfthorpe) of Grantham and his wife for their lives in 1330, and later in 1350 a demise to Robert de Dalderby and his wife for twenty years.[109] To a namesake of his guardian he made a charter of land in "le Scurth" in Drax, previously held without charter, and a quitclaim of rent (half a hen and eggs) and of "milne male" due to him.[110] A somewhat similar transaction with John Swynflett, another tenant in the soke of Drax, is recorded in an inquisition, but his alleged alienation of a parcel of the manor to the Prior of Drax was found to be without foundation.[111] From Patents of 1343 and 1344 we learn that the first Sir John had disposed of a messuage and ten bovates of land in Yarom (? Wharram) co. York., and of other property at Barnby near Pocklington, alike held in chief, to a family named Creppyng.[112] In 1352 Sir John Chamber-

Sir John died over sea 17 March 1360,[114] leaving a widow named Joan, a son Henry Chamberlain aged 36, and a daughter Joan, aged 26 and upwards,[115] married to John Lely, or Lelly, of Carlton near Snaith, by whom she had sons and daughters. Two other sons, John who married Maud daughter of William Tournay, and Robert,[116] had died in their father's life time without issue. The inquisitions taken after his death describe the Drax estate as consisting of seven messuages a toft, a mill, 145 acres of land, 5 acres of wood, 20*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* of rent and rents of 34 hens and 170 eggs; Marston and Wickenby as in the returns of 1303 and 1346, mentioning the lease of the former manor; and once more include the rent in Bloxholm of Lord de la Warre, now returned however as only 40*s.* We learn also of a settlement made by the deceased in 1332, Adam de Ayremynne Archdeacon of Norfolk being his feoffee for the purpose, whereby Drax, Wickenby, and the reversion of Marston were all assured to the deceased for his life, with remainder to John his son and Maud and to the heirs of their bodies, remainder to Robert and the heirs of his body, remainder to Joan the daughter and the heirs of her body, remainder to the right heirs of the deceased.[117] The effect of this was to disinherit Henry Chamberlain, his sister being thus heir of entail, and she and her husband had livery accordingly 18 July 1360.[118] Henry and the widow executed deeds confirming this settlement; and the estate having afterwards passed to Joan, she conveyed the manor of Marston to John de Neweland, and land in Drax to the priory there.[119]

The descent of the Chamberlains may thus be summed up:—

Herbert, Chamberlain of Scotland, c. 1130—1160. = Melisent grandda. of Osbert the Sheriff, m. between 1130-35.

Stephen Chamberlain of Wickenby s. and h., occ. 1160, 1190. = ...

Robert Chamberlain of Wickenby s. and h., occ. 1194, 1223; dead in 1225. = Aelina (Alice ?), dead 1226.

Sir Henry Chamberlain of Wickenby s. and h., had livery 1225; d. 1256. = Lucy, 1256.

THE BARONY OF MALPAS.

By Sir Alexander Swettenham, K.C.M.G.

Sir Peter Leicester wrote[1] :—" Now the issue of Robert fitz Hugh failing (who was the first Baron of Malpas), another came into his room, of as distinct a Stock and lineage " :—

This other was Nigell de Burcei mentioned in the foundation charter of St. Werburgh (A.D. 1093) thus : Nigell de Burcei coming into heritage of Gravesby and Storeton, confirms the previous benefactions of the Earl from those Manors, increasing them by eight bovates in Gravesby, teste Ranulpho et Garaceno fratre ejus—(who being two of Nigell's sons their surname is omitted).

Baron Robert fitz Hugh's own benefaction in the same charter is attested first by two other sons of Nigell de Burcei who subscribe vizt. William fitz Nigell and his brother Richard.

In the same charter William fitz Nigell appears attesting Hugo de Mara's grant of Radecliff, while Richard attests the Earl's own benefaction.

Thirteen years later (A.D. 1106) William and Richard fitz Nigell both attest the young Earl's charter to Abingdon Abbey.

After the decease of their father and of their brothers Reginald (or Ranulf) and Garacin (or Garin), the survivors William and Richard appear to have divided the fee. Two early charters to St. Mary's Nunnery at Chester have William fitz Nigell as first lay witness, the grantors being his brother Richard fitz Nigell and his tenant in Christleton, Robert de Ruffus ; the latter conveying all those bovates adjoining, and all other things, late of Reginald and Garin.[2]

From this, most likely, dates the division of the Rectory into two medieties.

[1] Historical Antiquities, p. 161.
[2] Calendar of Patent Rolls, 1400, p. 297, paragraphs (7) and (8).

Earl Ranulph the first's charter to St. Werburgh (A.D. 1119-28) contains the following passage: "LETITIA de MALPAS dedit . . . . teste et Concedente RICARDO domino suo et fratre suo RICARDO MAILARD, NIGELLO CHALDELL multisque aliis," which indicates that LETITIA MAILARD had married a man named RICHARD whose consent (as well as her brother's) was expressed. Also that (presumably by marriage) she could call herself de MALPAS, and that her husband was an attesting witness. So we find that the first lay witness to the Earl's Charter was RICHARD fitz NIGELL.

The MAILARD (MAILART vel MAYLORD) family (as later the PATRICS) were tenants of the Earl of Chester on the borders of NOTTS, LEICESTER and DERBY.

AGNES de MALPAS' charter to CALKE ABBEY[3] (tentatively assigned to the reigns of Kings Stephen or Henry II) proves the foregoing descent, and also that AGNES was then married to one NIGEL des PUIS (jure uxoris a lord of MALPAS) and had at least three sons, ROBERT, RICHARD and WILLIAM, of whom the first was old enough to attest: also that MALPAS then had two clergymen both of whom attested, vizt., GILBERT Clerc of MALPAS, whose brother ROBERT attests, and ROBERT Clerc of MALPAS, whose brothers THOMAS and FULKE, and son PETER, also attest.

A later charter of ROBERT fitz NIGELL to LANGLEY PRIORY[4] confirms, as overlord, a benefaction to that place; it is attested by (Master) ROGER de MENEWARIN.

Another charter[5] by the same ROBERT restores to a tenant in CHRISTELTON a tenement of which he had been unjustly deprived—the attesting witnesses include a brother JORDAN besides the two mentioned by his mother.

The foregoing will suggest a correction of a notice of a later charter[6] concerning GULDENE SUTTON, as follows:—"ADAM de DUTTON acquired from RICHARD son of ALPAIS . . . a bovate of land, etc."

The transcriber has no doubt misrepresented the words "des PUIS" or "del PUIS" (RICHARD's correct designation) by ALPAIS.

Mention is made of a grant of the moiety of MALPAS,[7] formerly belonging to GILBERT le Clerc, from ROBERT PATRIC to DAVID de MALPAS having been enrolled in the early plea roll called Domesday.

It is presumably this same GILBERT, who attested under the name GILBERT de MALO PASSU, the benefaction[8] of RADULPH BARON de MONTALT to ST. WERBURGH (1162-82).

The same GILBERT is found attesting, as GILBERT clericus de MALPAS, a benefaction possibly[9] of later date, from WILLIAM PATRIC to CALKE ABBEY of the rent of a mill at SUTTON BONNINGTON. [The date conjecturally assigned to this charter seems to be too late.]

[9] Jeayes' Derbyshire Charters, No. 539.

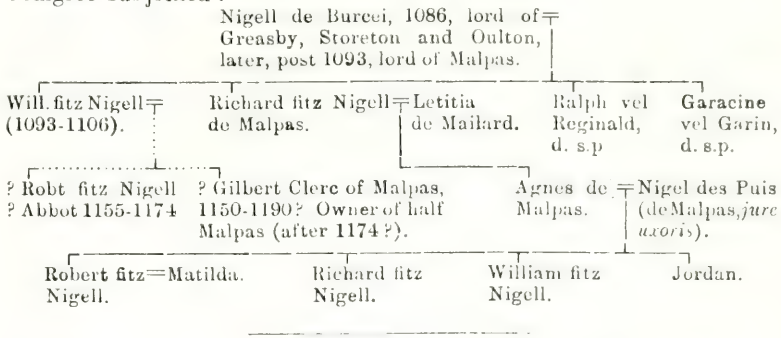
Now, a certain GILBERT fitz NIGELL is recorded as attesting a grant[10] of about 1150 A.D., and again as attesting another[11] which may be possibly as late as 1190; and a ROBERT fitz WILLIAM attests both the charters (7) and (8) previously mentioned[12] some places below the attestation of WILLIAM fitz NIGELL. The omission of any further distinction raises a faint presumption that he was also a fitz NIGELL and son of WILLIAM of that name.

If these two were both sons of WILLIAM fitz NIGELL, and both took Holy Orders (an unidentified ROBERT fitz NIGELL became Abbot of ST. WERBURGH, 1155-74), the possession of half the Barony by GILBERT the Clerc would be explained, and also the absence from all charters of any mention of a Baron of MALPAS during the twelfth century. Pedigree subjoined :—



A VELLUM PEDIGREE OF THE FAMILIES OF DUKINFIELD, OF DUKINFIELD, CO. CHESTER, AND HOLLAND, OF DENTON, CO. LANCASTER, DRAWN IN THE YEAR 1622.

This handsome pedigree-roll measures 9 feet 3½ inches in length and 1 foot 9⅜ inches in width. The title is within a tinted Jacobean cartouche with bold scrolls and fleurs-de-lys, etc. There is no other purely ornamental work. The shields, which, exclusive of the large achievement at the foot of the pedigree, number forty-eight, are heater-shaped and slightly eared. The arms are well and tastefully drawn in gold, silver and colours; a peculiarity of the work is that where the field is Argent it is striped with bold silver diagonal lines, in bend sinister, and this is also done in the cases where there are blank impalements. The names of the persons in the pedigree are within green-edged circles, the lines leading from these circles in the Dukinfield pedigree being red and those in the Holland pedigree blue. The copy given below is from one made by me in fac-simile in 1876 from the original roll, which was lent to me by the late Mr. J. P. Earwaker.

Mr. Keith W. Murray, Portcullis Pursuivant, has kindly identified two obscure quarterings of the Gamull shield. The second and third quarterings of Holland are as yet unidentified.

Above are two other crests—(1) On a torse Argent and Sable, a mount Vert thereon a pelican in piety proper, the pelican and young beaked and legged Or [. . . . . (2) Out of a crest coronet Or a demi-lion rampant guardant holding in the dexter paw a fleur-de-lys, all Argent [Holland].

FURTHER NOTES ON THE CAMPBELLS OF DUNTROON.

We have now cleared the ground for a reconsideration of the various lines of the Duntroon family, and I propose, for the sake of clearness, to set out what is now proved in regard to them, adding here and there in italics points that are probable though not actually proved. It will be understood that reference-notes will only be given to support newly-adduced facts and that, where no references are given, the proofs (or the suggestions of probability) were submitted in my former series of articles, which appeared in The Genealogist, N.S., vols. xxvii, xxviii and xxix. We begin, then, with—

The Main Stem.

Duncan Campbell, son of Sir Colin Iongátach Campbell of Lochow, probably by his second wife, Marion, daughter of Sir John Campbell (or perhaps illegitimate), received from his brother, Duncan, Lord Campbell,[14] on 30 January 1422,[15] a charter of Ardachastill, Ardefour, Achachrome, Poltalloch, Bennand, Bargaltroof, Peulcair, Coulhmuick, Crenanmor and Crenanbeg, with half the salmon-fishing of the river Add.[16] The castle of Duntroon, though obviously dating from before this period, was not then in the possession of the laird, but came to his family within the next twenty-eight years.

His son and heir, Duncan Oig Campbell, of Duntroon, who was a witness to the above charter, was steward of Ariskeodnish on 1 December 1448.

On 10 April 1466 John Campbell of Duntroon appears in a papal indult, as follows :—

" Petition by Colin Cambel, Knight, lord of the place of Glen Urquhay, Lismore diocese (on his own behalf and of the others below written), for a portable altar, on which, in fitting places, Masses and other divine offices may be performed, with indult to hear Mass before daybreak, if need be :

" Granted

" For the said Colin Cambel his wife and family.

" And for William Strewyling, knight, lord of the place of Ker.

" And for Duncan Cambel, lord of Kylmychel } brothers of the
" And for Gillespic Cambel, lord of the place of } said Sir Athym (sic, for Otter) } Colin Cambel.

" And for Colin Cambel, lord of the place of Ardchacynglas.

" And for Patrick Grahame of that ilk, knight.

" And for John Cambel, lord of the place of Dountreon.

" Given at Rome at St. Mark's on the 4th of the Ides of April in the second year of Pope Paul II."[17]

[14] Grandfather of the first Earl of Argyll.

[15] I shall use New Style throughout these Notes.

[16] The Genealogist, N.S., vol. xxxi, pp. 239-243.

[17] Registro di Suppliche (at the Vatican), 586, fol. 32. Glenorchy was a son of Duncan, Lord Campbell, and he had married Margaret Stirling (Strewyling).

The fact of the inclusion of John's name in such a document in association with these other lairds is almost conclusive of a near kinship; and as Duncan Oig was closely related to them, we are justified in assuming that Duncan Oig was John's father (or perhaps his elder brother).

As we saw in the former Notes, John was still living on 17 December 1470; and we conjectured that he had two sons:

Donald Campbell.
John Campbell.

DONALD Campbell of Duntroon is met with on 28 May 1496 and 30 July 1511, and is said to have fallen at Flodden in 1513. His brother

JOHN Campbell of Duntroon appears on 13 and 27 November 1513, 6 June 1524, and again in 1531. He was in some way instrumental in bringing about a treaty of peace between the Campbells and Macleans in 1545-6, and was still living on 9 February 1559, but died prior to 2 March 1560. He married a daughter of his kinsman, Colin Campbell, third laird of Ardkinglass, and had two sons, Duncan Campbell, who succeeded.

Donald Campbell of Lergyn,[18] 27 March 1567.

DUNCAN Campbell, of Duntroon, sixth laird, had succeeded his father by 2 March 1560, and was so closely allied in friendship with the Campbells of Glenorchy that he was entrusted with the fostering of two successive lairds of that race, Duncan Campbell of Glenorchy and Colin Campbell, his son.[19] It was probably he that presented the "great silver cuppe partlie overgilt with the laird of Duntron's airmes and name thairon," which later was regarded as a valued heirloom in the Glenorchy family. He was thrice married—(a) to Agnes nene VcNeill VcAchin, (b) to Agnes Maclachlan, and (c) to Agnes, sister of John Campbell of Inverlevir—and died sometime after 12 August 1584, having had issue—

Duncan Campbell (eldest son), who was living on 27 March 1567, but died without male issue prior to 12 August 1584.
John Campbell, who succeeded to Duntroon.

JOHN Campbell of Duntroon was laird of that place on 26 April 1588. On 7 August 1590 he bought the estate of Raschoille from Alester Makesag and died between 17 January 1600 and 11 January 1603, leaving two sons, Donald Campbell, his heir.

Colin Campbell, 4 March 1610.[20]

DONALD Campbell of Duntroon had succeeded by 11 January 1603 and was living in October 1630, when he rendered to Archibald, Lord Lorne, his accounts as "principal Officier of Ardskeodnish."[21] There can be little doubt that this office was the same as that held by his ancestor in 1448, and as we find it later on hereditary in the family, we may take it that it had been so all along. The laird married Anne Lamont, to whom he gave a liferent charter of Achachrome, Crenan and Strones on 4 March 1610, which was witnessed by his brother german, Colin.[20]

On 19 October 1625 he granted a charter of Raschoille to his lawful son, Patrick Campbell, and the said Patrick's wife, Margaret, lawful daughter of Donald Campbell, baillie of Rothesay, in implement of their marriage contract of the same date, and also of the office of Serjeandry (called also "martayship") of Ariskeodnish to his said son, in fee, but reserving his own liferent of the said lands and office. One of the witnesses to this charter was Donald's son, Mr. James Campbell of Strones.[22] I suggested in my former series of articles that this James may have been the Minister of Kilfinan; but in this I was most probably mistaken. In any case, the point is not important, so far as concerns the Duntroon line, as James of Strones left no male issue; for, at a later date, we have mention of a charter of the four merkland of Drumnamuckloch having been granted by Archibald, Earl of Argyll, to Donald Campbell of Duntroon, son of John Campbell of Duntroon, in liferent, and to his son, James Campbell, in fee; and it is stated that the lands fell in the said Earl's hands for want of heirs male.[23]

Donald had the following children :—

Duncan Campbell, the next laird.

Patrick Campbell of Raschoille, who later succeeded to Duntroon.

John Campbell of Glencharran, who was living in 1643 and died about 1677. His son, Colin Campbell of Glencharran, resigned that property on 4 February 1683.

Mr. James Campbell of Strones and Drumnamuckloch left no male issue.

Colin Campbell, brother of Patrick,[24] had issue :—

John Campbell, 27 January 1674.[25]

Anna, wife of Hugh McCallum in Kilmartin, 5 September 1665.

Katherine, wife of Archibald Campbell of Kilmorie (of Knap), 31 July 1605.

Janet, married (1617) Colin Maclachlan, fiar of Ardentrive.

Moir, wife of Colin Campbell of Barbreck, 2 April 1643.

Duncan Campbell was laird of Duntroon on 12 April 1642 and was Colonel of Horse in the Covenanting Army. He was living on 3 December 1643; but, though the clerk that wrote out the register of his Testament stated that he died in sixteen hundred and fifty- . . . . [26] It is quite usual to find these blank spaces not filled in. The Will was registered in 1658; and as these documents were prepared in advance by a clerk for the Commissary's signature, it would naturally be anticipated that the death had occurred in the preceding five years or so.

of Inverlochy[27]), since we have no record of him after 1643, and his son was in full possession of the estate in 1648. His wife's name was Margaret Campbell, and he had two children—

Niall Campbell of Duntroon.

Moir, whose marriage contract with Patrick Lamont,[28] younger, of Ascog, was signed on 8 November 1643.

NIALL Campbell of Duntroon married Mary, daughter of Hector McNeill of Taynish, their marriage contract being signed on 19 January 1643. I formerly suggested that this was probably Niall's second marriage, having given some credence to the (unfounded, as I now believe) story that Niall's daughter married Ferquhard Campbell of Lagganlochen.[29] Seeing that Niall's uncle, Patrick of Raschoille, married in 1625, this must have been Niall's first marriage; and as Ferquhard died about 1650, we witness the death of a fairy-tale! It is quite likely, however, that Lagganlochen married some other lady of Duntroon stock.

Niall appears as laird of Duntroon on 7 December 1648 and 10 May 1651, but was no longer living on 15 November 1659. His wife, Mary McNeill, survived him and re-married Archibald Campbell of Inverawe, occurring as his wife in a bond dated 8 November 1692[30]; and she was still alive on 10 June 1698, when she consented to a disposition of certain lands.[31]

In The Genealogist, N.S., vol. xxvii, p. 199, on the authority of a document in the Lyon Office, I stated that Niall was succeeded by his brother, Patrick. It is now, however, certain that this was an error. The document in question begins:—

> To Duncan Campbell of Duntrune succeeded Neil Campbell of Duntrune his son: to the said Neil succeeded Patrick Campbell of Duntrune his brother, and to the said Patrick succeeded John Campbell of Duntrune his son. . . . . .

Now, in the loose diction of those times it is quite possible that the second "his" might be intended to refer back to Duncan, despite the fact that the third "his" obviously does not. In any case, whether or not this was the intention of the scribe, as he was writing in the time of the second Duntroon laird of the Oib line, we know that the date of the document was after 22 November 1692, and it is exceedingly probable that exact knowledge of the succession of some forty years earlier would have been lacking to him.

But let us review the evidence. In 1625 Duncan's brother, Patrick, was married to Margaret Campbell, and at the same time his father granted this couple a charter of certain lands to be held by them conjunctly and by the survivor of them in liferent and by their heirs male in fee. Now, it is true that wives in those days were frequently short lived,[32] and their husbands generally contracted after-marriages; but when a father granted his son a charter such as this his intention was to "set up" the son in life and enable him to rear children, and he would naturally do this on the occasion of a first marriage. If the son married again, being already independent, he made his own terms with his bride. It is quite certain, therefore, that Patrick was marrying for the first time in 1625. Thus we may take it that his elder brother, Duncan, was married not earlier than about 1620, and that Duncan's son, Niall, was born somewhere about 1621—at any rate, not much earlier.

[29] Burke's Peerage (1902), p. 2031; also Craignish family histories, which speak of the bride's father as Niall Mor Campbell. The marriage is never even hinted at in documents, nor do Duntroon and Lagganlochen ever appear together.

If, then, Duncan had a second son, Patrick, he would have been born about 1622 and might have married about 1645 (certainly not earlier than that date), and thus his eldest son would have been of marriageable age about 1670. But Niall's successor, Patrick Campbell, of Duntroon, must obviously have married long before 1645, for his eldest son, John, was himself already married in 1659[33] and had given up hope of offspring by his wife in 1674.[34] Hence it is now quite certain that Niall was not succeeded by his brother; and since his uncle, Patrick Campbell of Raschoille was the husband of a Margaret Campbell in 1625, while Patrick Campbell of Duntroon (who also owned Raschoille) had a wife of this name in 1659,[33] there can be no doubt whatever as to the identity of these two Patricks. I would add that, while penning my former series of Notes, a general consideration of dates (for I had no knowledge then of the 1625 charter) caused me considerable misgivings in reference to this succession; but I was bound to accept the only evidence I then possessed, viz., the Lyon Office document.

Patrick Campbell of Raschoille, then, followed his nephew, Niall, as laird of Duntroon (eleventh of the line), and thus Colin Campbell, who, as we know,[35] was this Patrick's brother, is proved to have been another son of Donald of Duntroon. As we have seen, Patrick married Margaret, daughter of Donald Campbell, baillie of Rothesay, who was the mother[36] of his three sons—

John Campbell, the next laird.
Alexander Campbell of Raschoille, who took up the succession.
Donald Campbell, living 1659 and 1674.[37]

Patrick was still living on 13 January 1663,[38] but died prior to 13 June 1667, his wife surviving him.[39]

John Campbell of Duntroon married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Campbell of Inverlevir, but had no children by her (nor any expectation of such) in 1674.[40] He appears to have been still alive on 9 November 1675[41]; and as the public records contain no mention of him after that and no mention whatever of any lawful children, we are safe in assuming that he died without issue about that date. He had, however, a natural son, Archibald Campbell, who was alive at the latter date.[41]

John became financially embarrassed about 1670, as a result of which the estate of Duntroon passed to his creditor, a scion of the Campbells of Oib.

The Raschoille Line.

Alexander Campbell, second laird of Raschoille, succeeded his brother, John, as titular thirteenth laird of Duntroon. He died early in 1685,[42] having married Margaret, daughter of Colin Campbell of Blairintibbert,[43] by whom he left seven children:—

- Patrick Campbell, third of Raschoille.
- Niall Campbell, minister of Colonsay and Jura, of whom later.
- Duncan Campbell, minister of Kilchrenan and Dalavich, and later minister of Kilmartin, of whom later.
- Janet, who married, 31 December 1692, Lachlan, brother of Allan Maclachlan of Dunad.[43]
- Moir.[42]
- Barbara.[42]
- Margaret, wife of Duncan Campbell in Kilbride, both being alive on 15 January 1724.[44]

On 28 March 1689 Alexander's widow remarried Donald Campbell of Barichebeyan, and after his death she married a third husband, Colin Campbell, minister of Ardchattan, on 2 March 1702, both being alive on 15 January 1724.[45] We find her a widow for the third time on 12 September 1726.[46]

Patrick Campbell of Raschoille married first, 17 January 1695, Barbara, daughter of Archibald Campbell, who must have been a half-brother of Archibald Campbell of Inverawe, seeing that they bore the same name and that another of Inverawe's half-brothers, Alexander Campbell of Kilmartin, acted for her (being styled her uncle) to the exclusion of the head of the family.[47] Raschoille remarried Isobel Stewart, to whom he gave a liferent grant on 17 November 1717,[48] and died sometime prior to 15 January 1724,[49] leaving three sons—

- Archibald Campbell, who succeeded.
- James Campbell, who succeeded his brother.

Dugald Campbell, who was one of the legatees under the will of his uncle, the Rev. Duncan Campbell, 4 August 1737,[50] but must have died without male issue, since his elder brother, James, recognized the son of the Rev. Niall Campbell as his heir male, failing his own line. This we shall see later.

ARCHIBALD Campbell of Raschoille had succeeded to the estate by 12 September 1726, when he is mentioned as owing the jointure due to the widow of his grandfather, Alexander of Raschoille,[46] and, as we saw in my earlier Notes, he was living on 8 November of the same year. But his reign was a short one, for his brother,

JAMES Campbell of Raschoille was a witness to a marriage contract on 30 January 1731.[51] On 4 August 1737 he was executor and principal legatee under the will of his uncle, the Rev. Duncan Campbell,[50] and on 19 December following he received a precept of clare constat as nearest heir to his grandfather, Alexander Campbell of Raschoille, the docket on which states that he was son of Patrick Campbell of Raschoille, who was son of the said Alexander, who was son of Patrick Campbell of Duntroon.[52] On 15 December 1736 he married Jean, daughter of James Fisher, Provost of Inveraray, who was the mother of his son and heir. He was one of the guardians of the children of his deceased cousin, Donald Campbell, minister of Ardnamurchan[53] (of whom I shall speak later), and was living on 31 August 1767,[54] but died prior to 18 July 1775, leaving a son and daughter,

Alexander Campbell, his successor.

Barbara.

ALEXANDER Campbell, sixth laird (and last in possession) of Raschoille and seventeenth titular of Duntroon, married first, on 27 June 1767, Janet Fisher, who was killed shortly after by a fall from her horse, and secondly (on 4 April 1771) Margaret, eldest daughter of the deceased John Stewart, tacksman of Achadashenaig,[55] by whom he had—

James Campbell, born 15 January 1772; captain, 34th Regt.; died in India 1811, unmarried.

John Campbell, born 20 April 1774; captain in the mercantile marine; died in Jamaica about 1800.

Robert Campbell, born 5 August 1775; Lieut., 69th Regt.; died in Hayti about 1800.

Peter (or Patrick) Hume Campbell, born 21 September 1776, of whom later.

Niall Campbell, born 4 January 1779; died at St. Pierre, Martinique, 21 May 1794.

[56] It is curious that the Registers state that Archibald was baptized on 30 December 1779. There can be no doubt that the date given in the family bible is wrong—or perhaps it was wrongly transcribed by Alexander Duncan Campbell.

Alexander Campbell, born 14 February 1781; Captain, Royal Marines, of whom later.

Donald Campbell, born 19 May 1784; Major, 19th Infantry Regt., of whom later.

Duncan Campbell, born 10 November 1786; Captain, Royal Marines; died at Inveraray after 17 June 1816,[57] but probably before 22 October 1868, not being mentioned at the time of the death of his brother, Donald.[58]

Catherine, born 2 January 1773; died 10 April 1774.

Jean, born 24 October 1777; married, 17 June 1816, Duncan Rankin, minister of South Knapdale.[57]

Isabella, born 15 January 1782.

Elizabeth Amelia, born 20 April 1790; died 12 January 1791.

Alexander got into financial difficulties and sold Raschoille to Niall Campbell of Rudill on 13 August 1776[59]; but this sale appears to have been annulled. I think it probable that his creditors objected, for the case came before the Lords of Session, who ordered its sale (along with Ellanmackasken, an appanage of the family) by public auction, which took place on 9 March 1784, the property being bought for £1,476 by Patrick Campbell, writer in Greenock,[60] who afterwards became head of the Rudill branch of Duntroon.

Alexander was for a time Surveyor of Customs at Inveraray, where some of his children were born. On 27 May 1783 he was admitted a Burgess of Dumbarton.[61] In 1789 he was bankrupt; and since his parents were married in 1736 and he himself disappears from view after 1790, it may be taken as fairly certain that he died before 1800, when—

Captain JAMES Campbell, his eldest son, became titular laird of Duntroon and Raschoille, dying in 1811.

PETER HUME Campbell, fourth son of Alexander, writer in and for some years Provost of Inveraray, succeeded to the headship of the family, and, dying on 22 January 1841, was followed (if, as is probable, Archibald was already dead[62]) by—

Captain ALEXANDER Campbell, Royal Marines, who died on 10 January 1851 and was succeeded by—

Major DONALD Campbell, 19th Infantry Regt., the eighth son of the last owner of Raschoille. He was always known as "of Raschoille" in Argyllshire, which is sufficient proof (apart from the fact that his son owned all the family deeds) that he was head of the family. He married Margaret, youngest daughter of Robert Stewart, tacksman, of Achadashenaig in Mull, and died 28 November 1865, aged 81, his wife having predeceased him on 22 March 1842, leaving two children:—

Alexander Duncan Campbell, who follows.

[62] Planters in the West Indies did not live long in those days, unless they quickly made a fortune and retired.

ALEXANDER DUNCAN Campbell, eleventh of Raschoille and twenty-second of Duntroon, was born 14 October 1838 and died 12 November 1871, aged 33 years. He was unmarried, and his maternal cousin, Dugald MacLachlan in Lochgilphead was his heir.

It is not known at present who may be the representative of the House of Duntroon at this date; but an indication may here be given to enable future enquirers to place their finger on him. Alexander Duncan Campbell of Raschoille was, as we know, somewhat interested in his ancient descent, which means (in a Scotsman, certainly) that, had he been aware of the existence of a near male relative of Raschoille stock, he would not have left the family charters, etc., to anyone of his maternal relations. Therefore we may confidently say that in 1871 the male line of his grandfather was extinct. But his grandfather was an only son.[63] Therefore there were no male heirs of James Campbell of Raschoille.

This James had, as we have seen, a brother, Dugald; but as neither Dugald nor any son of his is mentioned in either of the Raschoille entails,[64] and as the grandson of Niall Campbell, minister of Colonsay and Jura, is clearly indicated in them as James' nearest heir, failing his own heirs, we know that, if such exists, the male heir of this cleric must now be titular laird of Duntroon. In other words, to find the head of the House at the present time we must go back to the second son of Alexander Campbell of Raschoille (who died in 1685). We return, then to—

Mr. Niall Campbell, minister of Colonsay and Jura, next brother[65] of Patrick Campbell of Raschoille. On 1 August 1707 we find him, as minister of Jura, giving a bond for 87 merks to Donald Campbell in Kilmichael of Glassary.[66] On 9 February 1708 we have his marriage contract, dated at Teybealanich, with Florence, lawful daughter of Donald McNeill of Tarbert (in Gigha), his cautioners being Patrick Campbell of Raschoille and Patrick Campbell of Duntroon (i.e., of the Oib line) and a witness being Duncan Campbell of Ashfield.[67] In order to indemnify his cautioners, Niall assigned to them, on the same date, certain payments of stipend due to him; and in this assignment Patrick of Raschoille is stated to be Niall's brother german.[68]

We have already seen[69] that Niall was called to Colonsay and Jura in September 1702, was ordained 10 April 1703, and died 30 April 1757; and there is no doubt that his Testament passed under the eye of Mr. Dugald MacLachlan about 1870,[70] and must probably have formed a part of the collection of documents from which I drew up the Duntroon

Inventory. Unfortunately, however, this Testament cannot now be found, though we may accept with confidence the little that Mr. MacLachlan has reported of it. Its loss, indeed, so far as we can judge, is not of very great consequence, as the Testament of his brother Duncan,[71] affords us the names of Niall's children, who were as follows :—

Mr. Donald (or Daniel) Campbell, of whom presently.
Alexander Campbell, living 9 November 1759, as will be seen.

The second son, Alexander, was not (as we shall see) the person mentioned as deceased in Niall's Testament, dated 1755 (as quoted in the Raschoille Memoranda[70]). It will be recollected that Niall bequeathed a small legacy to his granddaughter, Florence, daughter of the deceased Alexander Campbell, joiner. We now know, then, that this Florence was the child of one of Niall's daughters. It may surprise English genealogists that the son-in-law of a man of Niall's connections should be a "joiner"; but such things were by no means rare in Scotland, and the said son-in-law may have been (and probably was) equally well born.[72] Of the third son, John, I know nothing more than is stated above.

Niall's eldest son, Donald, was ordained missionary in Jura in November 1741, and was admitted to North Knapdale on 14 June 1748, being transferred to Ardnamurchan 19 July 1756, where he was admitted 17 September following and died 17 November 1759.[73] Eight days before his death (9 November) he executed a Trust Right and Nomination for the benefit of John and Alexander, his sons, and the heirs male of their bodies, whom failing, Alexander Campbell, his own brother german, and his heirs male, whom failing, James Campbell of Raschoille—the said Raschoille and John Stewart in Achadashenaig being appointed Trustees.[74] From this we gather (a) that Donald's brother, John, was then dead without having left male issue, (b) that Donald probably had no daughter, but merely the two sons mentioned, and (c) that James of Raschoille was his nearest paternal relative, failing his own children and brother.[75]

Rev. Donald Campbell married Mary, lawful daughter of Archibald Campbell of Jura, the marriage contract being signed on 14 February and 8 March 1750[76]; and it is clear that she was the mother of his children, since her father and brother were appointed, in the Trust above referred to, to oversee the accounts. These children were, as we have seen,

John Campbell.
Alexander Campbell.

Of the eldest son, John, we know nothing more than that he was alive on 31 August 1767.[77] But if he left descendants, the head of the House of Duntroon must be looked for among them. His brother, Alexander, was a witness on 11 November 1777,[78] and on 17 March 1782 he executed a settlement, bequeathing his property (with the exception of some minor legacies) to the children of Alexander Campbell of Raschoille, and died in May 1782.[79] We may thus be certain that he had no children of his own; but it does not follow that his elder brother was then deceased without issue. This elder brother might already have made himself financially independent, in which case a Scotsman's idea would have been to bolster up the failing fortunes of his cousin, the head of the family.

If, however, both sons of the minister of Ardnamurchan died without male issue, the headship of Duntroon may lie with the possible descendants of his brother, Alexander, failing whom we must go further back.

Duncan Campbell, minister of Kilchrenan and Dalavich and afterwards minister of Kilmartin, the next (and last) brother of the Rev. Niall Campbell, married, in November, 1712, Henrietta, daughter of Mr. Daniel Campbell of Duchernan, minister of Glassary, and sister of James Campbell, minister of Kilbrandon in Seyle, and died on 28 September 1736.[80] As full provision is made for his wife in his will,[81] but none whatever for his children, the Fasti are obviously correct in stating that he left no issue.

This exhausts the whole male line of Alexander Campbell of Raschoille, who married Margaret Campbell of Blairintibbert. In this line, as we have seen, there are only two persons that can have male heirs now living, namely, the son and brother of the Minister of Ardnamurchan—failing whom, we have to go back 250 years (to Donald, youngest brother of John Campbell of Duntroon, who was living in 1659) to discover any possible representative of the House of Duntroon.

I should like to add a word or two as to the name "Duntroon." In my former Notes I suggested that it is probably derived from Dun-na-Trwyn ("Castle of the Nose"). I have recently come across a headland in North Wales called Pentrwyn, which I am informed by a Welsh scholar means "Nose Hill."

ROYAL LICENCE TO THE REV. HERBERT LEIGH MALLORY TO TAKE THE NAME OF LEIGH-MALLORY, DATED 6TH OCTOBER, 1914.

GEORGE R.I.

GEORGE THE FIFTH, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas KING, Defender of the Faith, To Our Right Trusty and Right Entirely Beloved Cousin and Counsellor Henry, Duke of Norfolk. Knight of Our Most Noble Order of the Garter, Knight Grand Cross of Our Royal Victorian Order, Earl Marshal and Our Hereditary Marshal of England, Greeting!

WHEREAS Herbert Leigh Mallory of the Manor House, Mobberley in the County Palatine of Chester, Clerk in Holy Orders, Master of Arts of the University of Cambridge and Vicar of St. John's Birkenhead in the said County Palatine, son of George Mallory, formerly George Leigh, late of the Manor House, Mobberley, aforesaid, Clerk in Holy Orders, Master of Arts of the University of Oxford and Rector of Mobberley, by his second wife Henrietta, daughter of Trafford Trafford, late of Ou[gh]trington Hall in the said County Palatine, all deceased, hath by his Petition humbly represented unto Us

THAT the Petitioner's father the said George Mallory formerly George Leigh, and Julia his then wife, the only child and heir of John Holdsworth Mallory, Clerk in Holy Orders, Master of Arts of the University of Oxford and sometime Rector of Mobberley aforesaid, by Royal Licence dated the eighteenth day of December One thousand eight hundred and thirty two, were authorized to take and use the surname of Mallory only and to bear the Arms of Mallory and such surname and Arms were authorized to be taken used and borne by the issue of their marriage, and that the said Royal Licence together with the Arms were duly recorded in the College of Arms :

THAT the said Julia Mallory departed this life on or about the twenty-eighth day of March One thousand eight hundred and thirty five, leaving issue an only son George Mallory who died unmarried on or about the eighth day of March One thousand eight hundred and sixty four, and an only daughter, Harriet, who died married but without issue on or about the sixteenth day of March One thousand nine hundred and twelve :

THAT the Petitioner's father the said George Mallory subsequently married as his second wife Henrietta Trafford aforesaid and died on the twenty sixth day of July One thousand eight hundred and eighty five leaving with other issue the Petitioner, who was baptized at Mobberley by the name of Herbert Leigh and registered under the surname of Mallory, and matriculated at the said University of Cambridge in the surname of Mallory by which he has on all occasions since been known and in which he owns real and personal property ; and that he is desirous of having the said surname and Arms confirmed to him under Our Royal Licence and Authority :

THE Petitioner therefore most humbly prays Our Royal Licence and Authority that he may continue to bear the said surname of Mallory and take and use the surname of Leigh in addition to and before that of Mallory, that he may bear the Arms of Mallory quarterly with those of his own family and that such surname and Arms may in like manner be taken borne and used by his issue :

KNOW YE that We of Our Princely Grace and Special Favour have given and granted and do by these Presents give and grant unto the Petitioner the said Herbert Leigh Mallory Our Royal Licence and Authority that he may continue to bear the said surname of Mallory and take and use the surname of Leigh in addition to and before that of Mallory, that he may bear the Arms of Mallory quarterly with those of his own family and that such surname and Arms may in like manner be taken borne and used by his issue : the said Arms being first duly exemplified according to the Laws of Arms and recorded in our College of Arms otherwise this our Licence and Permission to be void and of none effect :

OUR Will and Pleasure therefore is that you Henry, Duke of Norfolk, to whom the cognizance of matters of this nature doth properly belong, do require and command that this Our Concession and Declaration be recorded in Our College of Arms to the end that Our Officers of Arms and all others upon occasion may take full notice and have knowledge thereof.

AND for so doing this shall be your Warrant.

Given at Our Court at Saint James's the sixth day of October, 1914 ; In the Fifth year of Our Reign.

By His Majesty's Command,
R. McKENNA.

THE PUBLICATIONS OF THE SURTEES SOCIETY. Vol. CXXII. VISITATIONS OF THE NORTH OR SOME EARLY HERALDIC VISITATIONS OF, AND COLLECTIONS OF PEDIGREES RELATING TO, THE NORTH OF ENGLAND. Part I. Edited by Frederick Walter Dendy, D.C.L. Durham (Andrews & Co.); London (Bernard Quaritch).

We have here two early Visitations printed exactly as they are in manuscript, a departure much to be commended, for too many printed Visitations have been so intermixed one with another that it is impossible to disentangle them, the result being confusing in the extreme. The two Visitations now printed have not hitherto been separately published, though, as Dr. Dendy at p. xlvii of his interesting and instructive introduction shows, both have evidently been laid under contribution in the manuscript edited by the late Mr. Charles Best Norcliffe for the Harleian Society in 1881 (vol. xvi). Dr. Dendy's criticism of this manuscript deserves to be carefully studied, as do his remarks upon Constable's Roll, which was printed as an appendix to Longstaffe's edition of Tonge's Visitation of 1530. The source from which Harvey's Visitation of Durham, Northumberland and Yorkshire in 1552 and Dalton's Visitation of the same counties in 1558 have been printed is a parchment bound volume believed to have passed from the possession of William Colbarne, York Herald, to that of William Flower, Norroy, from him to his son-in-law Robert Glover, Somerset Herald, afterwards to Ralph Brooke, also Somerset Herald, and later to Garter Anstis, all of whom made slight additions therein. It is known as Manuscript Anstis, c. 9, from the pressmark inside its cover. This manuscript contains other matter, including a Visitation or collection of pedigrees made by Flower in 1567, which it is intended to print in a succeeding volume. In addition to the above-named Visitations by Harvey and Dalton the present volume also includes a transcript of that part of Add. MS. 12477 (Brit. Mus.) which relates to Durham, Northumberland and Yorkshire, being chiefly a collection of pedigrees of persons holding official position in the North.

Of Harvey's Visitation in 1552 there are three versions in the College of Arms, one of which, D. 4, has been compared by the Editor with Anstis, c. 9, and is believed by him to be the fair copy delivered into the College of Arms, the Anstis MS. being probably the original notes made by the herald or his assistant, subsequently bound up out of due order and retained in private custody. The handwriting of the pedigrees, which are in narrative form, has not been identified. In nearly all cases in this Visitation there are tricks of the arms of the families recorded, and these have been very well reproduced. The transition state of the Wharton coat is adduced by Dr. Dendy as evidence of the MS. being contemporaneous with the Visitation.

Dalton's Visitation in 1558 does not seem to have been preserved in the Heralds' Office, and it is believed that the only copy of it in existence is that which now appears for the first time in print. It consists chiefly of pedigrees of persons holding official position in the Northern counties, particularly those who took part in the Earl of Westmorland's expedition against the Scots in 1558. The pedigrees, like those in Harvey's Visitation, are in narrative form and are believed to be in Colbarne's handwriting. Many of these descents are of considerable interest and go back for several generations. The Conyers pedigree is carried to the Conquest, and though there may be some doubt as to this, the notes of evidence drawn up by the herald for his guidance in drafting the pedigree are interesting. An inquisition contained in these notes describes the wellknown falchion by display of which to the Bishops of Durham the lords of the manor of Sockburn held their land. The pedigree of Anthony Grey of Brancepeth gives the line of the extinct Earls of Kent, and that of Sir Edward Gower the direct origin of the Dukes of Sutherland. There is some confusion in the early part of this Gower descent, and the inquisitions cited by the Editor do not altogether fit into the pedigree. This reminds us that as long ago as 1812, in a footnote on p. 444 of the second volume of his edition of Collins' Peerage, Sir Egerton Brydges remarks, "There seems something deficient in this part of the pedigree. The time requires at least another generation." The difficulty is probably due to the fact that Thomas, said by Dalton to have died "sine exitu," son of the first Sir Thomas Gower on the pedigree, nevertheless did leave issue by a Frenchwoman, and though his line appears to have failed, a son of his seems to have succeeded to Stittenham. In this Visitation there are not so many tricks of arms as in that of 1552, but in some cases, as under Brackenbury and Bowes, the word or motto is given. Many contemporary details are supplied, for instance, the sponsors of Ralph, son and heir of William Lord Eure, are recorded.

Dr. Dendy's editorial notes are most helpful, including, as they do, references to Wills, Inquisitions and Grants of Arms. Much use, we are glad to see, has been made of Mr. Jewers' Grants and Certificates contributed to this Magazine. Throughout there are numerous corrections of verbal errors in vol. xvi of the Harleian Society's Publications and in Foster's Visitations of Yorkshire and Northumberland. An Appendix of Illustrative Documents is added, among these being Commissions to Harvey and Flower to visit their Province, the letters patent appointing Dalton to be Norroy and a description of his Creation on 9 Dec. 1558 in the Duke of Norfolk's chamber in the Savoy. The frontispiece is a drawing of Dalton's effigy, wearing his tabard and collar of SS., from Harl. MS. 1099.

RECORDS OF THE WORSHIPFUL COMPANY OF CARPENTERS. Vol. II. WARDEN'S ACCOUNT BOOK, 1438-1516. Transcribed and edited by Bower Marsh, B.A.

Nothing brings so clearly before us the life of past ages as an ancient book of accounts. The food which was consumed, the malmsey, muscadel and beer which were so freely drunk, the coals that were burned, even the washing of table linen, are all set down in the volume before us in shillings and pence. It will thus be recognised that the student of prices has a rich treat before him in the perusal of an account book which covers nearly a century at a most important period of our history, including as it does the long struggle known as the Wars of the Roses. Great credit is due to Mr. Bower Marsh for his careful transcript of these records; his introduction is quite a model of clearness and brevity, and the general index which he has compiled forms a complete guide to the reader who searches for ancient customs and long obsolete words and trade terms. In the introduction Mr. Marsh traces the early history of the Carpenters' Company, originally merely a fraternity, but incorporated by Royal Charter 7 July 1477. The ordinances of the Company, which are printed in an Appendix, were placed on the City Records in 1486-7, though they date from an earlier period. In addition to the interesting events occurring in these records to which our attention is called in the Preface, such as the passage of Prince Arthur on the day he was created Prince of Wales, the coming of his bride the unfortunate Katherine of Aragon, and the coronation of Henry VIII, it is interesting to read of the spending in the year 1514 of ij^{s} viij^{d} on "Master lankestyr the harrad of Armys for the ovyrsyght of your clothe." The herald is identified in the index as Thomas Wall, then Lancaster Herald. The numerous entries of presentation of apprentices will be of use to genealogists, for there was often some relationship or family connection between master and apprentice. In addition to the general index mentioned above there is also a complete index of names.

EDMOND HAWES OF YARMOUTH, MASSACHUSETTS, AN EMIGRANT TO AMERICA IN 1635, HIS ANCESTORS AND SOME OF HIS DESCENDANTS. By James William Hawes, A.M. (The Lyons Genealogical Company, New York.)

In the year 1635 one Edmond Hawes, described as "a cutler, late of London," set sail at Southampton on board the good ship "James," for Boston in America, where he safely arrived on the third of June in that year. He is identified by the writer as a member of an old Warwickshire family long settled at Hillfield Hall in Solihull, whose pedigree is recorded in the Visitations of that county in 1563 and 1619. This Edmond was baptized at Solihull 15th October 1612 as "Mr Edmonde sonne of Mr Edmonde Hawes de Hillfeeldes;" he being the third son of Edmond Hawes the elder by his marriage with Jane daughter of Richard Porter of Bayham in Sussex. The Records of the Cutlers' Company, as proved by an extract from their books printed on page 136, show that Edmond son of Edmond Hawes of Solihull was apprenticed in 1626 to Edmond Warnett for eight years, so that there can be little doubt that the identification is correct. Edmond Hawes the father, about 1647, sold his ancestral estate and is believed to have removed to Sussex in the neighbourhood of his wife's relatives. Neither the date of his death nor his will have been discovered, but the will of a certain William Hawes, gent., of St. Dunstan's in the West, London, dated 11 Sept. 1652, leaves £40 to his brother, Mr Edmond Hawes, and though he makes no mention of this brother being then in America, as the names of the other brothers and sisters of the testator tally exactly with those of the children of the elder Edmond Hawes, it is probable that reference is here made to the emigrant.

The work is divided into two parts: (1) The Family in England, and (2) The Family in America. In Part I is a detailed pedigree of Hawes of Solihull with many references to authorities, including copies of some old wills proved at Lichfield, and there are also pedigrees of several closely allied families, namely Brome and Ferrers of Baddesley Clinton, Colles, Greswold, Porter of Bayham, Rody, Shirley of Eatington, Whitfield, and Catesby. Part 2 relates the history of the emigrant after his arrival in America, describes his life in Massachusetts, and gives his descendants to the eighth generation.

NORFOLK FAMILIES, by Walter Rye. Index Nominum by Charles Nowell. Norwich (Roberts & Co.).

This index, containing about 26,000 references to surnames and compiled under Mr. Rye's superintendence, will be most acceptable to those who possess his Norfolk Families, which as we may remind our readers is a collection of notes relating to all Norfolk families having any claim to gentility or celebrity. Although this work is itself arranged alphabetically, without a general index of names occurring therein much valuable information would have been lost. This index is issued to subscribers only, at ten shillings.

Notes and Queries.

DETHICK OF NORFOLK.—Can any Norfolk genealogist give the parentage and ancestry of Simon Dethick of North Elmham, co. Norfolk, gent., 1527? He was Bailiff of the Manor of North Elmham and an officer of Lord Cromwell (see Carthew's Hist. of Hundred of Launditch, pp. 101 and 448, pt. iii). He married Rose Crowe[1] (whose will as of "East Dereham, widow," was proved at Norwich, 21 November 1566), daughter of Christopher Crowe of Mileham, co. Norfolk. Simon Dethick died in 1543, and was buried at St. James, North Elmham, 1 March 1543; he left a family of eight children, all

[1] The arms of the Crowe family were: Gyronny of eight Or and Sable, on a chief of the second two leopards' heads of the first; granted by Camden 1614.

apparently under twenty-one when he made his will 10 June 1542, proved Epis. Court of Norwich 3 April 1543 (Reg. Cook, fol. 415), in which will he bequeathed land in several places in Norfolk. Issue:—

1. Richard Dethick, married 27 July 1554 Margaret Barsham.
2. Thomas Dethick, alive 1566.
3. John Dethick, died before 12 April 9th Elizabeth (1567).
4. Christopher Dethick, "of East Bradenham, co. Norfolk, Gent.," married Margaret . . . . , and died leaving a will dated 24 November 1590, proved at Norwich 14 August 1592.
5. Henry Dethick, at Cambridge 1556 and 1558, mentioned in Pettus and Crowe wills. (See Notes and Queries, iis., ix, p. 485, 20 June 1914.)

1. Christian Dethick, married at St. Simon and St. Jude's, Norwich, 29 October 1548, to Thomas Pettus, Mayor of Norwich 1590-91; born 1519, died 1597. Christian, wife of Thomas Pettus, died 1578, having had (with other children, including Cicely, married to Humphrey Camden of London, a kinsman of Camden the herald and historian) an eldest son—
   (1). Sir John Pettus, Kt., and M.P. for Norwich, born 1550, died 1614, who erected the Pettus monument in St. Simon and St. Jude's Church, Norwich, on which the arms of Christian Dethick appear as given below.
2. Rose Dethick, married at Beteley 16 Oct. 1549 to William Batch.
3. Elizabeth Dethick, married Richard Swift; he was alive 1613.

The arms of Christian Dethick, wife of Thomas Pettus, daughter of Simon Dethick of North Elmham, on the Pettus monument in St. Simon and St. Jude's Church, Norwich, appear thus:—Quarterly, 1st and 4th, Argent, a fesse vaire Or and Gules between three water budgets Sable; 2nd and 3rd, Gules, a chevron between three escallops Or (CHAMBERLAINE). This would appear to indicate that Simon was a son of John Dethick of Wormegay and Fincham, Norfolk (died 1558), by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter and heir of Thomas Chamberlaine, but further proof that this was the case is not at present forthcoming.

COTEREL, COTTERELL, COTTRELL, COTTRILL, AND OTHER VARIANTS.—For some years I have been gathering materials for a volume of "Collections for a history of the Cotterell Family," and should be much obliged to any of your readers who could direct my attention to references to the name, either as isolated references or otherwise. Extracts from Parish Registers, Wills, Calendars of Wills, etc., are all of interest, as also references to pedigrees, printed or in MS., fly-leaf inscriptions, copies of bookplates, etc. The scope of these "Collections" will be confined to no particular county or country, so that all references are of interest.

THE ASPINWALL AND ASPINALL FAMILIES OF LANCASHIRE.

By H. O. Aspinall.

Part I.

The above names are amongst the earliest of Lancashire surnames, and can be traced continuously from shortly after the Norman Conquest to the present day. No connected account of the families who have borne them has hitherto appeared in print, but the present writer has collected a quantity of interesting information relating to them, from which the following notes have been selected. To bring this information together it has been necessary to consult some two thousand different volumes, records and documents.

The name Aspinwall had its origin in an Anglo-Saxon place name, which when first given was apparently intended to describe some natural feature. It signifies the "aspen well"—the well, or spring, or source of some stream which gushed forth amongst the aspen trees. The locality to which the name became attached lies near or upon the boundaries of the ancient manors of Hurleton, Uplitherland, and Halsall, and within a short distance of the quiet old market town of Ormskirk. When the Burscough Priory was founded by Robert the son of Henry of Lathom in 1189, the church at Ormskirk was given to the Canons of St. Nicholas as a portion of its endowment; and from the Chartulary of the Priory we learn that land in Aspinwall had been given to the church at some earlier date still, possibly at the time it was built. The exact date of its building is unknown, but a reliable authority considers it to have been prior to the taking of the Domesday Survey. The locality remains to-day as for centuries past, quiet agricultural country, with a few houses dotted about here and there.

The name Aspinall was one of several variants of Aspinwall—there is abundant evidence to corroborate this fact. It may be well to note here that "Asmall" was another of these variants.

When surnames began to come into general use in Lancashire, the owners or tenants of quite a number of places around Ormskirk adopted the names of the lands they occupied as their distinctive second names, and amongst them was the tenant of Aspinwall. We find him described in a Plea Roll of the year 1246 as "Henry de Aspenewell"; and though there is some reason to believe that earlier members of his family may have lived there, he is the earliest person who has been found described as "of Aspinwall." The actual history of the family, then, commences from the year 1246, and we have to thank the custom which introduced second names into this country for supplying the key which enables us to collect from the records of Lancashire those which are essential to the making of the history. It is of course natural that records relating to the family at Aspinwall should receive our first attention, and we shall proceed to place in chronological order and quote some of these, summarising them later so far as is possible into pedigree form.

The earliest record appears in the Lancashire Assize Rolls, in the Roll of Pleas and Assizes held at Lancaster in the 30th-31st year of the reign of Henry III (1246),[1] and is as follows :—

> Morte d'Ancestor.—Walter, son of Gilbert of Scarisbrick, in right of his father, versus the Abbot of Cockersand, Avice daughter of Simon de Nathelarg, Henry de Aspenewell, and Robert de Nathelarg, re 10 acres in Hurleton.
> Defendants object that they do not participate in any tenement and that the claim is against them jointly and not individually. Non suit.

The Lancashire and Cheshire Historical Society have printed a number of "Ancient Charters preserved at Scarisbrick Hall in the County of Lancaster."[2] Several of these relate to transfers of land by or to members of the Aspinwall family, whilst others were witnessed by members of the family. In the latter case it sometimes seems that the witness may have had a personal interest in the transaction witnessed. The deeds range over several centuries, and will be quoted in their date order with other records.

Adam de Aspenewell witnessed several of the Scarisbrick Deeds between the years 1260 and 1280,[3] and is the second person of his name of whom we have mention. We also meet with him in an Assize Roll (408 m. 52),[4] which tells us that—

"In 1292, Avice, daughter of Simon de Netherleigh, Adam de Aspinwall, and others, alleged that Gilbert de Scarisbrick and Robert de Hurleton, chief lords of Hurleton, had disseised them of 80 acres of moor, moss, and pasture, and this claim was sustained."

Gilbert de Aspinwalle witnessed two Scarisbrick Deeds about 1288 and 1300.[5] He was a Juror at the inquest on Richard de Hasken taken at Lancaster on the 11th September 1329,[6] and his name also appears in an Exchequer Lay Subsidy Roll for Lancashire for 1332[7] (a subsidy for the wars of Edward III with Scotland)—

"Skaresbrek cū Hurleton (Scarisbrick with Hurleton). D, Gilb̄to de Aspenwall, iijs̄."

Simon of Aspinwalle makes a grant of land to his daughter Emma in a Scarisbrick Deed dated 1306[8]; and in 1318 he witnesses another as "Simon son of Adam of Aspinwalle."[9] The earlier one is as follows —

1306. "Let all know that I Simon of Aspinwalle have granted to Emma my daughter and her heirs and assigns all my land and manor Given at Aspinwall on the Feast of St. Peter's Chair (Jany. 18) in the 34th year of the reign of King Edward" (1306).

Between the years 1304 and 1339 we find a half-dozen records relating to various members of the family in the Patent and Close Rolls :—

"1304, May 20. Stirling.[10] Commission of oyer and terminer to John Broun and Henry de Kygheley touching an appeal which Adam, son of Simon de Aspenwalle brings in the county of Lancaster against Gilbert de Halsale, Master Adam de Worthington, Alan le Bretun, Robert Blundell, Alan son of Gilbert, and William le Carpenter for the death of Henry son of Simon de Aspenwall his brother."

"1310, Nov. 24.[11] Pardon to Henry son of Adam de Aspenwalle for the death of John de Aykestowe, on account of his good service in Scotland."

"1315, August 22nd. Rockingham.[12] Henry de Aspinwalle, in the King's prison at Stafford for the death of John de Aspenwalle at Ormeschirche in the County of Lancaster, has letters to the Sheriff of Lancaster to bail him until the first assize."

"1317, April 22nd. Westminster.[13] Simon de Aspenwal, in the King's prison at Northampton for the death of John de Aspenwal has letters to the Sheriff of Lancaster to bail him until the first assize."

"1318, November 1st. York.[14] Pardon with the assent of Parliament at York to Richard de Aspynwalle (several others are also named), an adherent of the earl of Lancaster."

"1328, June 9th. Woodstock.[15] To Geoffrey le Scrop and his fellows, justices to hold pleas before the King.

"Whereas the King is given to understand that Adam Banastre knight, Henry du (sic) Lee, Henry de Asspenwall, and Roger de Levre, and other adherents of Adam rose in war against the late King, who appointed, by his commission under the great seal, Thomas earl of Lancaster to pursue the said Adam and his adherents, by virtue of which commission the earl pursued them, and caused them to be taken and put to death, etc." (As this rather lengthy record contains no other information bearing on our subject, it is unnecessary to quote further.)

Adam de Aspinwalle witnesses a Scarisbrick Deed in 1306,[17] and in a volume of "Final Concords," or Lancashire Fines,[18] for the period 1308 to 1377, we find the following :—

"At Preston on Monday next before St. Michael, 7 Henry, Duke of Lancaster (25 September 1357). Between Thomas de Lathom the elder, chivaler, plaintiff, and Adam de Aspynwall, and Margery his wife, and William de Cleves of Aghton and Ellen his wife, deforciants, of 2 messuages, 20 acres of land, and 6 acres of moor in Lathum. The deforciants acknowledged said tenements to be the right of Thomas, to have and to hold to him and his heirs, for which Thomas gave them 20 marks."

The land given by Simon of Aspinwall to his daughter in 1306 is the subject of another Scarisbrick Deed in 1318[19] :—

"1318. Let all know that I Emma daughter of Symon of Aspinwalle have granted to John del Lont son of William de Molyneux of Sefton and his heirs and assigns all that land with appurtenances which I had by gift and feoffment from Symon of Aspinwalle my late father in the territories of Hurleton, Scaresbrec, and Snape. To have and to hold of the chief lords of that fee for due services paying to me annually seven pence at Pentecost and eight pence at St. Martins in Winter (Nov. 11). Witnesses—Gilbert of Scarisbrick, Richard le Walais, Robert of Hurlton, Walter of Aghton, and others. Given at Hurlton on Thursday the Vigil of St. Hilary in the 11th year of Edward II (1318)."

Thomas of Aspinwall witnesses four Scarisbrick Deeds between the years 1364 and 1398.[20] His name, with those of two other members of the family, appear also in another record—

"A List of Persons who promised to subscribe to the stipend of the Priest of the altar of our Lady at Ormskirk A.D. 1366.[21] :

	Thoms de Aspynwall
—	Rog de Aspynwall	ij*d.*
—	Ries le ffrenshe	iiij*d.*
ij*d.*	Johes de Aspynwall."

These, the first four names on the list, are followed by eighty others.

John of Aspinwall is mentioned in five of the Scarisbrick Deeds between 1370 and 1390[22] :—

"1370. Let all know that we (nineteen names follow, amongst them John of Aspinwall) have appointed as attorney our beloved in Christ William of Gosfordesich to deliver over full and peaceful seisin to Gilbert of Gosfordesiche of all lands and tenements which we have had by gift and feoffment," etc., etc.

"1371. This Indenture witnesses that we Gilbert of Gosfordesiche and William brother of the same have granted to John of Aspinwall for the whole of his life two parts of all messuages lands and tenements which we have had by gift and feoffment of the same John in the Vills of Hurleton and Skaresbreck. To be held of the chief lords for due services. And after the death of the said John then to his daughter Jane and her lawful heirs, and if she die without lawful issue then to the right heirs of the said John. Witnesses—Otho of Halsale and others. Given at Aspinwall on Tuesday the feast of St. Mary Magdalene (July 22) in the 45th year of Edward III."

"1389. Let all present and future know that I John of Aspinwale have granted to Richard Taglismon (wood-cutter ?) and Richard the Smyth of Burscough one messuage, five acres of land and 20 of moor and pasture in Vill of Aspynwale a hamlet of Hurleton and Skaresbreckk. To be held of the lords of the fee for due services. Witnesses—Gilbert Halsall, Knight, and others. Given at Aspynwale on the feast of the finding of the Cross (May 3) in the 12th year of Richard II."

The two other deeds are both dated 1390, and relate to the reversion of land to Emma, daughter of John of Aspynwall, under certain named eventualities.

Hugh of Aspynwall appears next, in a deed dated 1414,[23] and he witnesses another dated 1429.[24] The first tells us :—

"1414. This indenture witnesses that . . . Hugh of Aspynwall, Robert Attekynson of Snape and Thomas de Hesketh of Scarisbreck by their bond are firmly bound to William of Goldbourne in £100," etc.

This deed appears to have a sequel in another dated 1535-36,[25] which relates to an indenture made between Bartholomew Hesketh and William Goldbourne "of Asmall," in which mention is made of "one acre of land in the Byrthraw in Asmall," and of "William's inheritance in Asmall called the Jakkeyord."

Hugh Aspenwall, perhaps the grandson of the Hugh of 1414, is named in two other deeds.[26] In the first, dated 1468, Nicolas Hurdylton grants lands and rentals to Hugh Lathom, Chaplain, and Gilbert Hurdylton, and a rental, "from Hugh Asmoll, 12*d.*," is mentioned. The second is dated 1490, and refers to a grant of land by James Scaresbrecke to Thomas Assheton : "And I appoint as my attorney my beloved in Christ Hugh Aspenwall to deliver the same."

The evidence of the Lancashire Parish Registers becomes available after the middle of the sixteenth century, and we find the surname has by this time become that of a clan, the various families of which had settled not only in the neighbourhood of Ormskirk, but also in other parts of South Lancashire. The Ormskirk registers[27] commence in 1557, and between that year and 1626 there are 252 entries of births, burials, and marriages : 175 of these are entered as Aspinwall, 58 as Asmall, whilst the remainder for the most part resemble one of these two forms of spelling. An analysis of the entries soon shows that the information given by them is insufficient to give the relationship between the different persons and families whose names are given, when taken alone, and that without some supplementary information to help us they would be of little use. Fortunately that supplementary information is often available, and many of the names can be identified.

George Aspinwall died in 1559. The inquisition taken after his death is of especial interest in that it gives the names of his ancestors for seven generations past, in addition to other interesting information. The following abstract of it has been obtained from the original document in the Public Record Office :—

Though the death of George Aspinwall occurred within the time of the Ormskirk registers, no record of his burial appears in them. We need feel no surprise at this, however, as the entries at first were not very numerous. The second marriage of his wife is recorded—"Hugh Hoolme, Alis Aspinwall, 26 Januarie 1560," and amongst the burials an entry appears which shows there was yet another George about this time—"Eliz^th Aspinwall Relic George in ecclia 8 September 1571." There is also a George Asmoll mentioned in the will of Ralph Haselhurst of Golborne in 1512,[28] but his identity is uncertain.

Miles Asmall witnessed a quitclaim to Hugh Holme, yeoman, relating to property in Scarisbrick, in 1575.[29]

James Aspinwall of Aspinwall died in 1591, and his wife Katherin in 1596; the entries of their burials in the parish register are as follows—

[28] Lancashire and Cheshire Record Society, vol. xxx.
[29] Scarisbrick Deeds, 193.

"Jamis Asmall in ye new chancell 21 Maye 1591." "Katherin Aspinwall vid. 4 Maye 1596." They both made wills, as may be ascertained from the lists of "Chester Wills, 1545-1620."[30] In the prefatorial notes to this volume there is given a "List of Wills . . . Lost or Destroyed" in which the name of "James Aspinwall of Aspinwall, Co. Lanc., gent., 1591," unfortunately appears. We are further informed however, that an abstract of the lost will may be found in the Piccope MSS. preserved at the Chetham Library at Manchester. A copy taken from that abstract has been obtained :—

"The will of James Aspinwall of Aspinwall, Co. Lanc., gent. To be bur. in the par. Church of Ormiskirke. To Katheren my wife. My foure childeren, Edward, Anne, Grace, & Elizabeth. My father William Aspinwall. My sonne William Aspenwall to have certain heirlomes. Katheren my wife & Edward my sonne Exors. Witnesses : Bartholomew Hesketh, Gylbert Hansall & Henry Barton. The will was proved June 11th 1591."

William Aspinwall of Scarisbrick was a juror at the Inquisition after the death of Christopher Dixon of Haughton (Aughton), on the 22nd March 1605[31]; and on the 15th July of the same year, "William Aspinwall of Aspinwall" was a juror at the Inquisition after the death of Ralph Catton of Cronton, yeoman.[32] He is the last Aspinwall named in the Scarisbrick Deeds, three of which relate to transactions in which he was concerned :—

"1562. This is the final agreement made in the Queens Court of Lancaster on Monday the Feast of St. Bartholomew the Apostle (Aug. 24) in the 4th year of the reign of Elizabeth before Nicholas Powtrethaw and John Walshe, Sergts at Law, Queens Judges at Lancaster and the faithful there present. Between William Aspenwall plaintiff and Henry Starkey gentleman who was illegally occupying one messuage, two gardens, one apple orchard, ten acres of land, three acres of meadow, ten of pasture, and one acre of wood in Okenhead in Scaresbrek, whence the agreement was made between them in the same court and the said Henry acknowledged that the said tenements and their appurtenances were by right the property of the said William which he had by gift of the aforesaid Henry. Warranty to secure him possession and in recognition of this quitclaim and warranty the aforesaid William gave to aforesaid Henry £40 sterling."[33]

"1571. Let all know that I George Ireland of Hutte in Co. of Lanc., esq., have remitted for me and for my heirs and have quitclaimed to William Aspinwall of Ormiskyrk, yeoman, and to his heirs full and peaceful possession of and in one messuage or tenement with its appurtenances in Okenhed within the domain of Scarisbrick in Lancashire now or lately in the tenancy or occupation of Humphrey Hill (sic, ? esq., my father acquired by donation, bargain and sale of John Starkey gentleman. Given the last day of August in the 14th year of Elizabeth."[34]

"1578-1579. Let the present and future know that I William Aspinwall of Scarisbrick in the County of Lancaster have granted and delivered to James Gorsuch within Scarisbreck (certain properties) situated in or derived from Scarisbrick called Bartillshouse and especially in the farm conjointly or separately in the tenure of my villains, Jane Gill relict of Humphrey Gill, Thomas Richardson, and Katherine Blundell, with the exception of a certain piece of land . . . adjoining the Kings highway that leads to Snape, etc. In witness whereof I have set my Seal to this paper on the 8th day of January in the 21st year of Elizabeth." [35]

The preceding records have brought us to the beginning of the seventeenth century, and to a point when a new era in the family history commences, for about this time the family removed from Aspinwall to Toxteth Park, near Liverpool. Its further history will be continued in the next number of this magazine.

OSBERT THE SHERIFF.

By W. H. B. Bird.

III. Horley and Hornton.

Since the first part of this essay was written Mr. Farrer has very kindly sent me a copious collection of notes concerning Osbert and the Chamberlains, their lands and connections, inviting me to make use of them, an invitation I accept with cordial acknowledgments. A good deal of the new matter for which I am indebted to him will fall naturally into the discussion upon which I was proposing now to enter; but first I will take this opportunity to make one or two corrections, and to mention a few matters supplementary to my previous narrative. On page 2 "Richard I" was, of course, a misprint for Richard II. In the passage quoted at the foot of p. 73, the phrase in the vernacular should read horn wyd horn. Closer scrutiny of the MS. shews that what I had taken for a contraction is nothing but a decorative appendage of the letter following. Yarom (p. 81) appears to be an error for Yapham (not Wharram), where Creppyng held land of Chamberlain.[120]

[34] Scarisbrick Deeds, 192.

[35] Ibid., 195.

[120] Cal. Inq., ii, no. 351. See also Rot. Hundred, vol. i, p. 104; Nomina Villarum (Kirby's Quest, Surtees Society), p. 310; Testa de Nevill, p. 377, where on the same page the same error is made.

In regard to Acaster, Mr. Farrer informs me that Moubray's interest there arose from a charter of Henry I to Nigel de Albini—later in date, it would seem, than Osbert's gift to Selby. In the Memorials of Ripon[121] is mention of a difficulty arising in 1106 between the sheriff, presumably in his official capacity, and that church, in regard to liberties said to have been granted by King Athelstan. As to the date of Osbert's death, Mr. Farrer reports that he has not been able to trace him in any royal charter after the year 1114.

A passage from the chronicles of Meaux Abbey,[122] which I translate as follows, is worth repeating in full.

Osbert the Sheriff, at one time a man of note, was a priest, and was by King Henry I made sheriff of Yorkshire and Lincolnshire. Because he was of the King's household he acquired many lands of many earls and barons of England for his service; and among them he obtained of the then Earl of Albemarle[123] Kayngham in Holderness and Totele[124] in Lindsey. Of these lands Osbert gave four carucates to three knights freely to hold of him, namely two to Humphrey de Kayngham, one to Bernard de Haburre in Kayngham marsh, and to Fulcher de Rooston the carucate which the Earl of Albemarle gave to the Abbey of Meaux, namely that held of Fulcher by Askyll his neif, father of William de Hedun. And be it known that the land of Neuland itself was reclaimed from the Humber by Humphrey de Kayngham by assent and gift of Osbert, and by him surrounded with a dike, and he held it of Osbert the Sheriff so long as Osbert lived. But after his death came his sons, William Turneiant and Richard; and because they were a priest's sons, and might not claim the heritage, they agreed to give King Henry money that he should suffer them to possess the lands of their father. And when they had given the King a part, and he demanded sureties for the residue, nor might they find any, all the lands aforesaid remained in his hands. Then Stephen Earl of Albemarle, father of Earl William, redeemed the lands of his heritage out of the hands of King Henry, and all the gifts thereof made by Osbert the Sheriff or his tenants were made void. Likewise did other earls and barons whose tenant Osbert was. For from that day forward neither Askill, nor William de Hedun his son, nor Simon son of William, nor any of their heirs had the carucate of land of Saltagh, or Neweland, afterwards conferred upon the monks in almoin. But whether the 60 marks [which the monks gave for the pasture upon Humber called Saltagh and Newland, and for one carucate of land adjacent in Kayngham, to certain claimants[125]] were paid to William and Richard the sons of Osbert, or to the knights above named, or to Askill and William [his son], or to all or any of them, is unknown [to the writer].

If we may accept the chronicler's story, it will account for the state of things disclosed by the Pipe Roll of 1130-1. One ought, however, to bear in mind that the documents on which it was based are not now forthcoming, and that the date of the chronicle is about 1400, when the rule of celibacy was more binding upon the secular clergy than in the eleventh century.

Two references to Stephen Chamberlain in the Monasticon I overlooked. He confirms the gift of the church or advowson of [124] Can this mean Tedolfbi (Thealby), held by Stephen de Alba Mara at the time of the Lindsey Survey?

[125] Above, p. 85.

Acklam made by William de Scures to Thornton Abbey[126]; and when Henry II gave land in Hardwick to the priory of Newsted by Ancolme, Ivo the tenant, and Stephen his lord, had land of the king's demesne elsewhere by way of exchange or compensation, but the place is not stated.[127] It seems that he also gave the advowson of North Reston to the priory of St. Leonard Torksey,[128] and in the second volume of Early Yorkshire Charters[129] Mr. Farrer has published his charter of confirmation to Bridlington priory of lands in Acclum given by William de Scures and Robert (his brother), a toft given by Alan their father, and the site for a mill. Emma wife of Roger de Saucheusemara to whom Robert Chamberlain assured dower in Marston by a fine of 1195,[130] was perhaps his father's widow.

According to a pedigree in Ormerod's History of Cheshire[131] Stephen's opponent Helte de Boisdele, or, as Mr. Farrer thinks more probable, Helte's wife Idonea,[132] represented Osbern the Domesday tenant under Earl Hugh of Newbold, etc., where he was succeeded before the Lindsey Survey by Hugh his son. As Osbern son of Tesson, the same Domesday tenant held Dodleston and other lands in Cheshire.

It remains to add that Alina widow of Robert Chamberlain was living as late as 1251[133]; to mention a fine of Easter term 1245 between the Bishop of Lincoln and Henry Chamberlain of the five bovates in Wickenby and nine tofts which he had to farm of the Bishop[134]: of that land 14 acres had passed to the prioress of Steynfeld, but as a result of the fine his farm was raised from 10*s*. to 20*s*.; and to draw attention to the account of Marston in the Hundred Rolls,[135] where the ownership is, for some reason incomprehensible to me, attributed to Robert Chamberlain.

So far as we have seen hitherto Melisent and the Chamberlains were to be regarded as the sole heirs of Osbert. A fine, however, levied in 1222,[136] raises a number of difficult questions. The parties to this fine were Hugh Bardolf demandant and Robert Chamberlain tenant of 6½ carucates in Wikingeby, Westlakeby, Riston, Ludford and Carleton, the said Robert demandant and the said Hugh tenant of half a knight's fee in Horningeton and Hornleg'. In either case the demandant makes a quitclaim to the tenant: then follows a covenant by Chamberlain that whatsoever he or his heirs may hereafter acquire of the heritage of Osbert the Sheriff, ancestor of both parties, shall be shared between them equally, but Bardolf and his heirs shall hold their moiety of Chamberlain and his heirs, acquitting the moiety of all cost.

The first problem is to identify the lands named. On the original document appear the three counties, Oxon', Linc', Ebor'. It will be noticed however that the last, though in a contemporary hand, is written some way below the others, as if it were an afterthought. The places in the first list are all in Lincolnshire, and in all except Ludford[137] we already know that Osbert and the Chamberlains held land. Horley is in Oxfordshire, and there is a Hornington in Yorkshire, but it would be vain to search there for traces of Bardolf's or Chamberlain's estate. For with Horley on the extreme northern border of the county lies the village of Hornton, forming a sort of salient or projection into the adjoining county. The two occur constantly together, and (as we shall see) this particular holding of half a fee in both may be traced for two centuries and more. We shall find an entry in the Fine Roll relating to this very matter in which they are linked together; and to put the question beyond a doubt, shall find Bardolf dealing with land in Hornton.

Domesday records three manors in Hornelie; one of ten hides held by the Count of Mortaign, Ralph being his under tenant; another of one hide held by Robert de Stafford, Richard under tenant; the third of ten hides held by Berenger de Todeni, Ralph under tenant. One of these manors, with the advowson of Horley church, was given to Lincoln about 1107 by Bishop Flambard of Durham, his gift being confirmed by King Henry I,[138] and afterwards formed part of the prebend of Sutton. With regard to the others I have no information until 1213, when Chamberlain is engaged in litigation with both Simon de Kyme and Hugh Bardolf about the half fee, and fines for a precipe against the latter.[139]

Kyme's claim I have already discussed. Nine years later the dispute with Bardolf was settled as we have seen; and in 8 Henry III, by an Oxfordshire fine, Bardolf conveys a messuage, 76 acres of land and 5 acres of meadow in Hornton to the Abbot of Stanley, the gift being confirmed by Nicholas de Verdun, quit of all demands by him and his heirs.[140] In 1234 the sheriff had directions to extend Hugh Bardulf's lands in Yorkshire, which were pledged to the Jews[141]; but he had already disposed of Horley and Hornton to Robert de Lexinton, whose title was confirmed by the King in 1232.[142] Accordingly in 1235 John de Lexinton pays the aid upon half a knight's fee in Hornle held of Verdun.[143] The return of 1242[144] also shews John de Lexinton holding half a knight's fee in Hornele and Horninton of Roese de Verdun, said to be of the honour of Brandon, and adds that he had it by gift of Robert de Lexinton.[145] At this time there is mention also of the prebendal estate, then held by the Archdeacon of Buckingham, and described as a moiety of the town of Hornele, which leaves apparently a moiety of Horley and all Hornton to make up the half fee with which we are concerned.

John died at the beginning of 1257, and was found to hold ten hides of land of John de Verddun of the fee of Braundon. Henry de Lexington Bishop of Lincoln, his brother and heir, died in 1258, when his nephews Richard de Marcham and William de Sutton were found his heirs.[146] From later inquisitions we learn that Markham was succeeded by Robert his brother, who left three daughters his coheirs; Sutton by Robert his son, who died in 1274, leaving a son Richard aged eight at Michaelmas in that year; but in none of them is the Oxfordshire estate mentioned. About this time the Archdeacon of Northampton and Robert Paynel are returned as claiming free warren in Horlington and Horley.[147] In 1316 a return shews Richard de Sutton and "Neupolyn" prebendary of Lincoln[148] tenants of Hornlee cum Hornington; in 1346 Richard de Sutton holds half a fee in "Horneburi" and Hornynton; and in 1428 John Langeston half a fee in Hornele and Hornton late of Richard de Sutton.[149]

It is not easy to fit these statements together. Probably the prebendal manor was that held of Stafford by Richard; for if that had not been severed from them by alienation, it would no doubt have descended for centuries among the Stafford knights' fees, and the lordship of so important a family is more likely to have been extinguished by a gift or sale to the church of Lincoln than to have passed without record to Verdun.[150] The fiefs, however, of both Mortaign and Todeni soon passed to others, and no such difficulty need arise out of the disposal of their lands. Moreover it is tempting to see in their under tenants one and the same Ralph—and that a person already known to us. But if only one Domesday manor descended to Bardolf and Lexington, what has become of the third? If on the other hand both are included in the Brandon half fee, how comes the hidage to be halved? And how comes the single hide to be reckoned a moiety of the town? Gifts to the church, such as that to Stanley, may perhaps be the answer to one question. As to the last, the disproportion of the three estates was not really so great as the hidage assessment seems to imply. While the hides are reckoned at 10, 10 and 1, the ploughs were 8, 8 and 3 in number, and those upon the demesne lands 3, 3 and 2 respectively, so that even in the eleventh century, it would seem, the demesnes were not very unequal, though one of the lordships was very leniently assessed.

Let us venture for a moment into the region of hypothesis, and suppose that Richard held the smallest manor of the three, and the advowson of the church of Horne-lei, which stood upon his territory, while in the manor furthest from it Ralph set up an establishment on a more sumptuous scale, which became known as Horne-tun; that being an ecclesiastically minded person, now seated at some distance from the original church, it pleased him to build and endow a second church at his own doors; that then or later this church, taking its name from the manor house near by, was freed from the jurisdiction of the original rector, and the manor on which it stood was made a separate parish or parochial chapelry, leaving to the mother church Richard's manor and Ralph's other manor. On the assumption that there was but one Ralph, this hypothesis seems to me roughly to account for all the facts, except the reduced hidage of 1257; and that might be accounted for in part by the endowment of Hornton church and the gift to Stanley. Perhaps some deduction should also be made for land which in the next century was held by Robert de Ardern.[151]

To return to the fine of 1222, the terms of the covenant suggest that the parties conceived themselves to be coheirs of the common ancestor, the jus esnecie resting with Chamberlain. Now if either Melisent or her mother had a younger sister, one might say at first sight that she was treated with gross injustice by King Henry I. But, according to the chronicler of Meaux, all Osbert's lands (and his brother's too) must be reckoned as having twice or more escheated to the crown, first at his death, and again at the death without issue of one or both of his sons, who were reckoned illegitimate. It was competent therefore for the King to grant them to whom he would; the niece or nieces had nothing but a moral claim to his favourable consideration; and the grant made to Herbert and Melisent is to be regarded purely as an act of grace. In that case, strictly speaking, no legal title could be set up by any other descendants of Osbert; but on the other hand after the lapse of a century the facts may have been difficult to prove, and we know that at a later date the Common Law was not always very scrupulous about what were perhaps regarded among the laity as rather nice distinctions of churchmen, or how could Queen Mary and Queen Elizabeth have both been accepted as equally legitimate heirs to the throne?

Who then was Hugh Bardolf? The name is not unknown in history; but Hugh Bardolf the Justice had died some years earlier without issue, and was succeeded by Robert his brother, who left no male issue; Sir Hugh Bardolf of Wormegay the peer was not yet born. This Hugh was son and heir of one Ralph Bardolf, and in 1213 paid relief on his succession to lands in Lincolnshire, Yorkshire and the honour of Pontefract.[152] He also inherited the claims, whatever they were, which his father had put forward to Osbert's inheritance. Further than that I have not succeeded in tracing his pedigree.

Mr. Farrer suggests that, after Herbert's death, Melisent took a second and a third husband, by whom she had male issue. But in that case Chamberlain would still be her sole heir at law: indeed I am not clear that she would have power, if she wished, to settle lands on children of a later husband. Further, after nearly thirty years of married life, it is not likely that she became the mother of a second family; while such evidence as we have tends to shew that Herbert outlived her, for Stephen, we have seen, appears to be in possession of her lands immediately after his father's death. The possibility remains that, when King Henry gave her in marriage to Herbert, she was "the King's widow," and already had a son. But if that were so, he in turn would be her heir at law, solely entitled to any lands which came to her by inheritance, but with no legal title whatever to escheated lands of which the King, by virtue of his prerogative, thought fit to make her a grant at the time of a second marriage.

The subject matter of the fine, however, does not include all Osbert's lands by any means. There is no mention of Marston, for example, or of any Yorkshire lands; nor mention, for that matter, that the lands specified were lands of Osbert. We know, however, that all the Lincolnshire lands, except Ludford, had been his; and the natural inference is that those taken by Bardolf were regarded as part of the same heritage—if not derived from Osbert himself, then from the brother whose heirs (if heirs they were) were his also. The inference is all the stronger because Kyme was a claimant there as well.

As to the Yorkshire lands, it would seem that at some date previous to 1208 Ralph Bardolf, father of Hugh, was in actual possession of North Duffield; for he was sued for one knight's fee there by Robert de Turnherd and Joan his wife, claiming a title from Robert Fossard ancestor of Joan.[153] About the year 1212 Robert Chamberlain recovered that property from him[154]; but the process was by wager of battle, and unfortunately particulars of their rival claims are not given. A few years later Robert in turn was sued for land there by the Prior of the Hospitallers, but in defence set up the last mentioned decision, pleading that his title was res judicata. However the dispute between them was settled by a fine in the early part of 1219, when Chamberlain made the Prior a grant with warranty of 12 acres called St. Nicholas Hermitage.[155] In 1250, by another fine, Henry Chamberlain conveyed the manor to Roger de Thurkelby, saving the dower of Alina his mother, and reserving to himself and his heirs 100*s.* a year rent, and the mesne lordship which was afterwards in dispute.[156] A year later, by a third fine,[157] Thurkelby acquired some interest of Walter de Wyldeker in this manor, paying him 40 marks, whereas he paid Chamberlain 130. No reservation is made this time, except Alina's dower, which seems to shew that the manor is the same. From Thurkelby it passed by inheritance to the family of Salveyn.[158]

Ralph Bardolf was, I suppose, the man who at that time was lord of Hutton Bardolf, He occurs in 1202 as party with the Prior of Kirkeham to a fine of the advowson of Hutton ; and by another fine shares with Gilbert de Aton half a carucate of land in Neuton.[159] In 1214 is a fine between Hugh Bardulf and the Prior of Malton of property at Barningham.[160] The same year Hugh was sailing with the King to Poitou.[161] With this meagre account I must take leave of him. Possibly someone more conversant with Oxfordshire topography may be in a position to shew that there were two Ralphs in Domesday, and that the half fee which included Hornton and a moiety of Horley represents but one Domesday manor, identifying the third manor of Hornelie elsewhere. But unless one Ralph or both were identical with Ralph the Canon, it is difficult to see how the representatives of Osbert were, as such, concerned in this Oxfordshire property.

NEVILL OF COMBE NEVILL

(Surrey and Essex).

There has never been any clear pedigree of this branch of the family of Hugh the Lion. Manning and Bray's "Surrey" has, of course, the entries relative to Combe Nevill (near Kingston), but that is all.

The proofs of descent begin with the Fine Roll 30 Hen. III (1246)—

"Quia constitit Regi quod Johannes de Nevill in vita sua legavit Herberto de Nevill custodiam terre et heredum Willelmi de Nevilla que fuit in manu ipsius Johannis habendam et tenendam usque ad legitimam etatem ipsorum heredum una cum maritagio eorundem, mandatum est Henrico de Wingham et Coescaetori suo in comitatu Surreie quod de custodia predictorum terre et heredum eidem Herberto plenam seisinam habere faciant cum omnibus catallis et proficiis in predicta terra inventis quando illam capi fecerunt in manum Regis. Woodstock 28 Aug."

Stapleton (Lib. de Ant. Legibus), lxvi, says :—

"William de Nevill was probably another brother who held land in Oxstead (Aestede), a parish in the hundred of Tandridge, co. Surrey, of the inheritance of his mother Joan de Cornhill."

We learn from the Testa that "Hugo de Nevilla tenet quandam partem in Acstede in capite de domino Rege per servicium duorum militum et dimidii de Honore Bolonie, quam cepit cum filia Henrici de Cornhulla."

Hoare's "Wilts," quoting the Close Rolls for 1204 and 1205, gives us William in a useful rôle:—

"The King to William de Nevill to take 7 'tunellos vini' to Clarendon; also to send carriage to Southampton to carry our wine which Daniel Pincerna will give you; 7 dolia of white wine, to clarendon."

William de Nevill held estates at South Moreton, Berks, and Blackarswell in Whiteparish, Wilts, as well as Combe Nevill and Oxsted, so that living in Wilts he was made useful at Clarendon.

William de Nevill to overlook the repairs to our palace of Clarendon. (Close Roll, 6 John.)

The King to Hugh de Nevill, William's father, "cendula coquinam nostram de Clarendon et reparare domos nostras ibidem." (Close Roll, 7 John.)

William de Nevill to give William, Earl of Salisbury, 4 oaks in Clarendon. (Close Roll, 17 John, 16 Aug., 1, p. 226.)

Clarendon was intimately connected with the memory of William's father, Hugh the Lion, for many years after his death, as we can see from the "Visus Manerii de Clarendon," 1273:—

"The ridge of Nevill's chamber is rotten in one part and wants covering in another."

"And in the chamber called Hugh de Nevill's there must be wainscoting behind the bed." (Exch. Rolls, 32 Hen. III, 1248.)

"And in making a door there between the queen's Wardrobe and the chamber of Hugh de Neville and in making a chamber for the use of the bailiff and a seat for the queen's use." (Exch. Rolls 35 Hen. III 1251.)

And the next year:—"In wainscoting the King's Chamber under the King's chapel at Clarendon and removing the wall from the traverse of that chamber and painting in it the History of Antioch and the Combat of King Richard."

Evidently Hugh the Lion and the Crusaders were still remembered with pride in the palace of Richard's nephew.

According to Hoare's "Wilts," William de Nevill married Isabel, dau. of Walter Waleran, Lord of Dean, near Salisbury, who died 1200, and their dau., Joan Nevill, carried half the manor to the St. Martins.

Curiously enough, William had dealings with his "uncle Adam," the notorious gentleman excommunicated by St. Hugh of Lincoln for marrying a child of four. "Brian de Insula and Gracia his wife v. William de Nevill ⅓ part of 1 carucate cum pertinenciis in Morton with the dower of the said Gracia by the gift of Adam de Nevill her first husband." (Coram Reg. Roll, 11 Easter 5 Hen. III, Berks.)

I have never been able to find the Inq. p.m. of William, possibly because he died in the lifetime of his brother John, who was the real owner; but he seems to have had a son John, besides Joan, as the De Banco Roll 22, Trin. 5 Ed. I, Wilts, gives this enrollment—"John de Nevill cognovit quod concessit et per scriptum suum obligavit Willelmum de Nevill filium et heredem . . . . . Manerium de Cumbe Nevill in com. Surr."

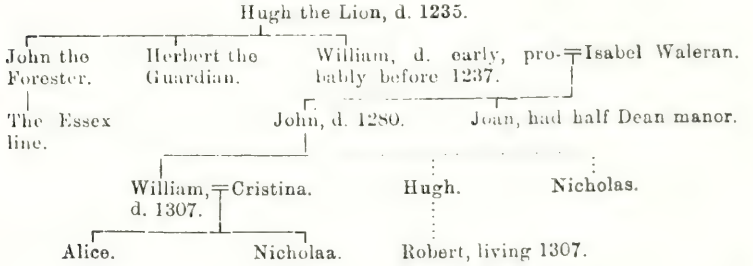
John seems to have died three years later as his Inq. p.m. is dated 8 Ed. I., File 25, No. 4, 20 June, Berks.

"The said John held of the King in chief in the vill of Southmortone 50*s*. rent by the service of half a knight's fee. William de Nevill, his next heir, is 22 and more." William, son of John, died 35 Ed. I (1307), and his Inq. p.m. is dated in that year and names Cristina as his wife, and says that besides Combe Nevill and South Moreton they hold Blackareswell in Whiteparish from Rich. le Englais by the feoffment of Nicholas de Nevill, and half the manor of Combe Nevill is held of Robert, son and heir of Hugh de Nevill and the heiresses of South Moreton are Alice and Nicholaa. Who Robert, son of Hugh de Nevill, in 1307, was I do not know, for John was the son and heir of Hugh of Essex in 1307. Perhaps this Robert died early, or possibly he may have been son of another Hugh from Lincolnshire, the demesne lord. The Inq. p.m. of Alice is dated 13 Ed. III, No. 13a; she married Richard le Wayte, and their son Henry was 18 months old. Nicholaa married John de Hadersham. An Inq. Ad quod Damnum, File 165-6, says :—

"Ralph atte Crouche and Alice his wife to retain a messuage and land in South Moreton acquired to themselves and the heirs of the said Alice from Walter de Chilton and Agnes his wife, who held it at fee farm from John de Nevill, whose heirs retain the manor of Combe Nevill by Kingston."

We now obtain the following pedigree :—



The puzzling part of the story of Hugh the Lion's descendants, however, comes much later.

1466.—Sheriff of Surrey and Sussex to take all possession of John Nevill of Nevill, Knt., and render account to Chancery. (Pat. Rolls. 560.)

Five years later occurs a very long and very interesting list of all the feudal dues which still apparently belonged to the Nevills of Combe Nevill; they include Arnall, the Leadenhall property, and dues on lands in Notts, Derby, Yorks, Glos., Oxon, Berks, and Surrey.

1471. Feb. 18.—Grant for life to James, Earl of Douglas, in lieu of a like grant to him by letters patent dated 23 Nov. 36 Hen. VI, which are invalid, of £200 yearly, viz. £14 from the farm of the town or manors of Darlyngton and Ragenhull, co. Notts, £10 from the fee farm of the town of Retford, £10 from the farm of Arnall at the hands of Hugh Nevyll, son and heir of John Nevyll, or his heirs, or the Sheriff of Nottingham and Derby. (Pat. Rolls, p. 243.)

I must confess that these entries are puzzling to a degree when one remembers that in 1358 all the manors, at any rate, if not the copyhold lands, had passed over to the Bohuns in payment for the accumulated debts of the Essex family.

The Calendar of "Feudal Aids" mentions a Margery Nevill at Wethersfield in 1431, and the old Index of Essex Wills under the Commissary of London and Essex, 1441-1619, gave an Edmund Nyvell in 1459, Salomon in 1462, Margaret in 1489 and Thomas in 1506.

In Chancery Miscellanea, bundle 58, file 7,285 (1496, 6 Feb.), comes an interesting entry (Latin) which I could only decipher in part:—"Rex vult certis de causis certiorari super tenore recordi et processus utlagari in Willelmum Nevill armigerum in Com. Essex promulgati . . . . pro Rege . . . . ac si idem Willelmus se reddideat (sic) prisonem Marescalcie ipsius Regis coram pro rege occasione predicta necne ideo tenor recordi et processus . . . . necnon certificatio redittionis illius in Cancellario Regis sub sigillo Thome Fyneux capitalis Justiciarii ipsius regis distincte et aperte . . . apud Westm: 6 Feb. 11 Henry VII." (English)—"to be outlawed or satisfy John Bourgchier Reginald Townesend John Waren clerk and John Serle for 2 messuages 3 tofts 200 acres of land 23 acres of meadow 16 acres of pasture, 65s: 5d: for the Manor of Stanly called Giffardys (in N. Essex) except 40 acres of land 6 acres of meadow 6 acres of pasture, 40 sols, taken from the same manor by force and against the peace of the late King Edward IV by a certain assize of novel disseisin between them in the presence of Sir Thomas Bryan."

William rendered himself at the Marshalsea prison on the 6th February in person. A striking little picture of the great game of grab that went on in the troubled years between Edward IV and the coming of the Tudors. Gifford's Manor is on the borders of Suffolk and Essex, and the picturesque Manor House is still in existence I believe. I think William Nevill, armiger, was either playing grab himself or possibly was robbed by stronger hands. It is hard to say which, and depends on the side he took in the quarrel.

The Essex Subsidy Rolls, 108-160 (1523), give Nevills at Rochford, Shoebury, and Heybridge; 108-161, at Willingale; 108-151, at Roxwell, Blackmore, Springfield, and Broomfield; 108-232, 108-241, at Chelmsford and Danbury, Much Baddow, Woodham Ferrers, and Writtle; and 109-257 (1524) at High Ongar and Fifield. The Nevill wills, which begin in 1528 with Nevill of Willingale, Ongar, Nalinghurst (in Braintree), Much Baddow, and Danbury, want much working at before fitting into any pedigree. The Subsidies seem to show that three or four men held property in, roughly, four parts over Essex.

EDMUND R. NEVILL.

ALLESTRY, OF ALVASTON, CO. DERBY.

The Allestrys were in Derbyshire in the early Plantagenet period. Originally they are said to have been retainers of the Lords Audley. Afterwards they had lands at Turnditch, Alvaston and Walton-on-Trent, where branches of their house settled. A Nicholas de Alestre represented Nottingham in Parliament as early as 1393. John de Alestre sat for the same borough in 1416, 1421, 1422 and 1425, and a Thomas Allestre in 1442, 1448-49 and 1467. From the sixteenth century they are well known in local Derbyshire annals as Members of Parliament, Bailiffs and Sheriffs, as will be seen from the subjoined pages. I am not aware of the existence of any complete pedigree of the family. The following is an attempt to put together such information as I have been able to glean in the hope of eliciting additions from someone better acquainted than myself with Derbyshire families. My authorities for the following are chiefly the Visitation of Derbyshire, 1663-4 (see The Genealogist, O.S., vol. iii, p. 61), Hunter's Familiæ Minorum Gentium (Harl. Soc. Pub., vol. xxxix, p. 1038), Wills in P.C.C., and Monumental Inscriptions in Alvaston Church as given in Glover's History of Derbyshire. By the kindness of Mr. Keith Murray, Portcullis, the Chester MSS. at the College of Arms have been also examined.

WILLIAM ALLESTRY, of Alvaston, born at Derby 1588; admitted to Gray's Inn, 16 Nov. 1618, as "son and heir of Thomas Allestry of Alvaston, gent."; admitted to St. John's Coll., Cambridge, 1618-19; succeeded his father, 1631. Recorder of Derby, 1640-44; M.P. for Derby, 1640-43. Died 4 Sept. 1655, aged 67; buried in All Saints Church, Derby. M.I. Will dat. 2 July 1655, pr. in P.C.C. 8 Aug. 1657. Married firstly, Sarah, daughter of Thomas Smith, of Derby, gent., "by whom he had 3 sons and 4 daughters" (Le Neve, Mon. Ang.). She was buried at All Saints, Derby. Married secondly, Mary, daughter of William Agard, gent., and widow of Edward Smith, gent. (who died 20 Sept. 1638). She died 1 April 1674, aged 63, having had also three sons and four daughters (Le Neve). Of the six sons and eight daughters of the foregoing William Allestry by his two wives, the following are known, but it is difficult to determine by which mother—

1. William Allestry, of Alvaston (Visitation of Derby, 1663-4). Named in will of sister Grace, 1655, but died probably shortly afterwards, s.p.
1. Grace, born 1631, died unm. 1 Dec. 1655, aged 24, buried at All Saints, Derby. M.I. Will dat. 28 Nov. 1655, pr. in P.C.C. 8 Aug. 1657 by Mary Allestry her mother [? step-mother].
2. Sarah, named in the will of her grandfather, Thomas Allestry, 1630.
3. Rachel, named in the will of her sister Grace, also in that of her father.

[The above possibly by the first wife.]

2. Thomas Allestry (IV).
3. Charles Allestry, born about 1654; matriculated at Christ Church, Oxford, 31 March 1671, aged 17; B.A., 1674; M.A., 1677; admitted to Gray's Inn, 1 Dec. 1674, as "2d son of William Allestry late of Gray's Inn, deceased." Named in will of sister Grace, 1655. Vicar of Cassington, Oxford, 1655, and of Daventry, Northants, 1689, till his death. Bur. at Cassington, 28 March 1707.
4. Mary. } both named in father's will.
5. Rebecca. }

Other children are named on M.I., but probably died young.

IV. THOMAS ALLESTRY, of Alvaston, eldest surviving son and possibly heir to his elder half-brother, born about 1651; admitted to St. John's College, Cambridge, 27 May 1669; "past 18" as "son and heir of William Allestry, lawyer, deceased." Admitted to Gray's Inn, 3 July 1671 as "son and heir of William Allestry, late of this Inn." Named in the will of his sister Grace, 1655. Married Joyce Sitwell, and had at least one son surviving—

Thomas Allestry (V).

V. THOMAS ALLESTRY, of Alvaston, eldest son and heir to his father; died s.p. 18 March 1740. M.I. at Alvaston, on which described as "grandson of the Recorder." His heiress was his niece (seemingly the daughter of an unnamed brother), namely—

MARY ALLESTRY, of Alvaston, which estate she carried in marriage to John Tempest Borrow (or Borough), Esq. He survived his wife and died 28 April 1781, aged 78, s.p.; buried at Alvaston (M.I.), having devised Alvaston to his nephew, John Borrow, eldest son of his younger brother, John Borrow, of Hulland, by whom the estate was sold in 1812.

AN ILLUMINATED PATENT OF NOBILITY, DATED 1ST MARCH 1621, BY WHICH SIR HENRY POWER WAS CREATED VISCOUNT VALENTIA IN THE COUNTY OF KERRY,[1] FORMERLY IN THE POSSESSION OF THE LATE COLONEL THOMAS RICHARD CROSSE, OF SHAW HILL, NEAR CHORLEY.

Contributed by J. PAUL RYLANDS, F.S.A.

This interesting document, a transcript of which is given below, measures 2 feet $5\frac{3}{4}$ inches across, by 1 foot $11\frac{1}{2}$ inches from top to bottom, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches are folded upwards for the purpose of attaching the seals. An ornamental border surrounds the engrossed part of the deed on three sides, issuing at the upper left hand corner from a large scrolled initial "J," which measures about 9 inches by $8\frac{1}{2}$ inches at its widest and deepest parts. From the initial there also issues a blue band, $1\frac{1}{4}$ inches deep extending to the edge of the border to the right, which is inscribed, in text letters in burnished gold, [J]ACOBUS DEI GRACIA ANGLIE: being the commencement of the deed. The writing of the deed is well engrossed in the old common Chancery text, a clear red line separates each line of writing and the words which begin each paragraph are larger than the others and are in burnished gold.

[1] See G.E.C.'s "Complete Peerage," vol. viii, p. 13.

The initial "J" is in gold, parts of the work being raised and highly burnished; it is on a blue ground and is elegantly scrolled with some conventional flower-like ornaments, variously tinted, and some interlaced work on a red ground, which is very effective. Within the initial is a carefully executed figure of James I in the royal robes and wearing the Garter with its collar and jewel. The King is seated on an ornate throne, having an elaborate canopy; he holds in his right hand a golden sceptre terminating in a fleur-de-lys and in his left the orb; he wears a royal crown of two arches. At the sides of the throne are marble pedestals: that on the King's right supports a golden lion crowned and that on the left a silver unicorn, both sejant. There is a scrolled gilt cushion laid upon another one, and both have gold tassels; these cushions rest upon a red and white pavement composed of crosses patonce. The King's face has been rubbed and is therefore indistinct, but it looks as if it might once have been a good likeness.

The border of the patent is profusely dotted with what have once been raised silver spots on the white vellum ground, but have now become black from the action of the air. Besides the rose and thistle there are purple flags, purple and red carnations and other flowers, some birds of bright plumage, butterflies, and other insects, alternated with heraldic emblems upon the silver-flecked border. On the left-hand portion of the border are the arms of France ensigned with a royal coronet, and below this shield is a large representation of the badge used by Queen Anne Boleyn (which appears in the initial letter of her patent as Marchioness of Pembroke), the stump of a tree couped and eradicated Or, sprouting therefrom at each side a branch of roses some Argent and some Gules stalked Vert, upon the stump of the tree a falcon silver (which has turned black), legged gold, crowned proper and holding in the dexter claw a sceptre terminating in a fleur-de-lys Gold. On that part of the border which is at the top of the patent are the Stuart Royal Arms surrounded by the Garter, crowned, and supported by the lion and unicorn. Equi-distant from these arms are large representations of the crests of England to the left and Scotland to the right. On the border to the right are the arms of Ireland surmounted by a ducal coronet, between a large golden fleur-de-lys crowned as a badge for France, and a large golden portcullis with silver point crowned, which was a badge of the house of Tudor and was assumed by that family in allusion to their descent from the Beauforts. The Tudor badges were probably painted by an illuminator who copied his border from one of the time of Queen Elizabeth.

The patent reads as follows:—

Appended to the patent by twisted cords of silver and gold thread are the great seals of England and Ireland. The former, which is in a fairly perfect state, measures six inches in diameter; the latter, which is unfortunately broken and nearly one quarter of it lost, measures four-and-a-half inches in diameter. Both appear to have been originally of a dark green colour, but they have faded to a dingy olive tint.

On the great seal of England, on the obverse, the King is represented sitting on his throne, in royal robes, having the great collar of the Order of the Garter about his neck, a royal crown on his head, the sceptre of the fleur-de-lys in his right hand, and in his left the ball or mound with a cross on the top thereof. On the right side of the throne is a lion, crowned, sejant, supporting a banner of the arms of Cadwallader, the last king of the Britons (Azure, a cross pattée fitchée Or). On the left side is an unicorn, gorged with a coronet and chained, sejant, holding with his sinister foot a banner of the arms of King Edward the Confessor (Azure, a cross patonce between five martlets Or).[1] Over these standards are placed two identical shields of the arms of the Stuart kings, surrounded by the Garter and surmounted by crowns of four arches. Both the obverse and reverse of the seal are inscribed, JACOBVS . DEI . GRACIA . ANGLIÆ . SCOCIÆ . FRANCIÆ . ET . HIBERNIÆ . REX . FIDEI . DEFENSOR. On the reverse of the seal the King is represented in armour on horseback, to the right; in his right hand he brandishes a sword over his head, on his casque, to which is attached a scrolled mantlet, is placed the royal crest, and his left hand holds a shield of the royal Stuart Arms (Quarterly, first and fourth France and England quarterly, second Scotland, third Ireland). His horse is caparisoned, having the same arms on the cloth covering its flanks. The ground of the seal is charged with a rose, a fleur-de-lys, and a harp, all crowned, the badges for England, France and Ireland, and a greyhound runs below the horse.

The great seal of Ireland has a somewhat similar obverse, omitting the two gartered and crowned shields, but the canopy of the throne is not the same as that in the larger seal: the legend is identical. The reverse has the same legend; it represents the King on horseback to the right, with the royal arms on the horse-cloth and on the shield; the casque is surmounted with the same crest, without a mantlet; there are no badges, but the greyhound is in the same position as that on the English seal.

In both seals there is some beautiful diaper-work of roses and fleurs-de-lys on the back of the thrones; the ground of the obverse of the English seal is diapered with quatrefoil ornaments, and that on the Irish seal with little harps; the horse's trappings, also, are elegantly diapered and bordered.

[1] Sandford, in his Genealogical History of the Kings of England, p. 519, states that there are four martlets, and that the arms are those of King Edgar.

NOTE.—Both families of Stable and Stables were wide spreading in Pontefract and the neighbourhood (the registers being full of them), and there being so many Williams and Leonards it is difficult to continue the pedigree further. There were branches at a later date at Hemsworth and Huddersfield who claim to descend from that at Pontefract, but where they are likely to have joined it is not easy to determine.

There were others of this name who found a home in Germany and in Holland. Daniel Harenc, of St. Anne's, Westminster, bachelor, for whose estate Admon. was granted in 1703 to a creditor, may have borne some relation to the Daniel Harenc who became, by his important manufacture of woollen stuffs, the virtual founder of the refugee colony at Bucholtz.

Three Harenc wills proved in the P.C.C. relate to the Dutch family. The first is that of Peter Harenc, "a worthy preacher of the Welsh Church at the Hague" made in conjunction with his wife, Albertine Jacobine de Brinck, in 1742, wherein he adjures his niece, Elizabeth, "never to decay of the piety which hath been in our family." He may, perhaps, be identified with the Pierre Harenc who ministered to the Flemish and Swiss congregations in Constantinople between 1711 and 1717, preaching in Dutch and French. The other two wills are those of the pasteur's nephew and niece, John Henry Frederic Harenc and Mary Ma dalen, then widow of Michael Falaiseau and mother of Joseph Falaiseau, Col. Commandant of the regiment of Nassau dragoons.

EXTRACTS FROM A SEVENTEENTH CENTURY NOTE-BOOK.

This is the Copie of the Bill of Tho: Oxenden against John Isaake, John Diggs and others.

Humbly sheweth unto your good & gracious Lordship your continual Orator Edward Oxenden Cosyn & heire of Richard Oxenden sometime of Wingham that is to say somne of Thomas Oxenden late of London son of [blank] brother of the said Richard Oxenden [who] was seised of the Mannor of Broke with the appurtenances and of eight Messuages foure hundred acres of land meadow pasture & wood with the appurtenances in the Parish of Wingham, Adesham, Wikham brewes, Goodneston, Nonyngton, Woodnesburgh, Ash beside Sandwich within the Countie of Kent, Staple, Preston and Chistlet, & allso of land in Sandwich within the sayd Countie, & so seised of the said land and Tenements enfeffed John Dygges & John Isaake, Roger Brent, William Bettyn and Thomas at Wode with others now dead to have to them & to their heires upon trust, & to the behofe of the said Richard & his heires, & to the intent to performe thereof his last Will, by force of the which Feffement the said Feffees were seized of the sayd lands & Tenements in their demene as of fee to the use & behofe aforesaid. And after the sayd Richard Oxinden made his last Will, willing by the same that the sayd Feffees should suffer Alice wife of the sayd Richard to have and enjoy all the sayd landes & Tenements for the Terme of her life paying all & all manner of charges, & keeping sufficiently the Reparations of the same landes and Tenements without distruction or wast, & the finding with the sayd landes & Tenements Agnes, & Isabella then daughters unto the sayd Richard, & after the decease of the said Alice the said Feffees should make estate of all the landes and Tenements aforesaid in Wingham, Goodneston, Staple & Woodnesburgh, and allso of the sayd landes within the Towne of Sandwich to Agnes his eldest daughter to have and to hold to her & to the heires of her body lawfully begotten, and if it happen her to die without heire of her body lawfully begotten then the said lands & Tenements to remaine to the sayd Isabell her sister and to the heires of her bodie lawfully begotten, and allso that the sayd Feffees should make Estate to the sayd Isabell of all the sayd lands & Tenements in Addesham, Wikham brewes, Goodneston, Nonyngton, Assh beside Sandwich, Preston and Chistlet to have & to hold to her & to the heires of her body lawfully begotten, the remainder thereof for lack of such issue to the sayd Agnes her sister and to the heires of her body lawfully begotten. And if it happen the sayd Agnes & Isabell to die without issue then all the sayd landes & Tenements should remaine to the sayd Thomas Oxenden Father to your sayd Orator, Cosyn & heire to the sayd Richard Oxinden, & to the heires of his body lawfully begotten. And if it shall happen the sayd Thomas Oxinden to die without issue of his bodie lawfully begotten then the sayd landes &

Tenements to remaine to the sayd Feffees to be sold & the money thereof received for to be disposed for the soule of the said Richard Oxenden after their discretion. Et is soe Gracious Lord that the sayd Richard Oxinden & Agnes, & Isabell his sayd daughters be deceased without heire of their body comeing, and the sayd Alice late wife unto the sayd Richard hath taken to husband oon John a Wode, & they doe occupie all the sayd landes & Tenements by the sufferance of the feffes aforesayd, have felled & sold gret tymber growing upon the sayd landes & Tenements to the value of twenty pound & more, & allso dayly wast & destroy the sayd landes & Tenements to the greet hurt & dishert [blank] of your sayd Orator & contrary to the last Will and intent of the sayd Richard their Feoffer. Wherefore Gracious Lord for as much as shee hath as yet therein no State, but occupy by sufferance of the sayd Feffes your sayd Orator hath no remedy by the Common Law for the punishment of the sayd wast. Please it therefore your sayd gracious Lordship the premises tenderly considered to grant severall writts of Subpæna to be directed as well to the sayd John Dygges &c. as to the sayd John a Wode & Alice his wife comanding them by the same to appeare before the King in his Chancery at a certaine day, & under a certaine peine by your Lordship to be limited to answere to the premises. And that the sayd Feffes may be rulede to make estate to the sayd Alice, the remainder to your said Orator & to the heires of his body comeing according to the sayd will. And also that the sayd John a Wode & Alice may be ruled to satisfy to your sayd Orator for the wast afore don, and to take further direction herein according to right & good conscience &c.

Allein Edinghā al^s^ Engham of the parish of Woodchurch in Kent married the daughter of Townelande : hee lived 79 yeares.

Nota that this Allein Edingham, or Engeham, was in good credit in the time of King John, hee passed his time wisely in that time of trouble & was appointed by the sayd King to attend uppon Hubert de Burgo then Constable of the Castle of Dover against the force of Lewis the ffrench King ; he lived over the age of 79 yeares, & dyed in his Mannor house of Engeham Dec : 10, 1251, & lies buried in the Church of Woodchurch aforesaid.

[1] There has been some alteration here, and the MS. appears to read "William," whereas the Visitations call him "Warham."

[2] The Visitations give no brothers to Thomas, or sisters as here named. "Tho :" is probably a slip of the pen and should read Dudley.

[In the margin] coates wch the Engehams quarter are, 1. Engeham, 2. Plurenden, 3. Pickesden, 4. Goodneston, 5. Malveisin, a [ ] ar. Engeham bare anciently, as is in the College windoes at Ashford partie ꝑ chevr. sa. & ar. 3 O [intended for roundles] counterchanged & on a chief Ar. a lyon passant gardant gu.

[1] [In the margin] the 2 wife of Vincent was . . . daughter of . . . Relict of Everinge.

[2] This does not agree with the printed Visitation of Kent (Harl. Soc. Pub., xlii, 50) or with that in the Heralds' Office. There seems to be confusion between two Edwards.

had a second brother named Rowland, & Vincent, & William who dyed S.P., sisters Dorothy, Jane & Elizabeth who dyed S.P., & Mary, Marie, & Marie which 3 Maries dyed younge.

William Engeham was the first sonne of Edward, Tho : the second who dyed S.P., sisters Marie, Katherine & Priscilla.

COLLECTIONS FOR A HISTORY OF STAFFORDSHIRE. Edited by The William Salt Archæological Society, 1914. Collections for a History of Pirehill Hundred by Walter Chetwynd of Ingestre, Esq., A.D. 1679. Harcourt of Ellenhall. By Josiah C. Wedgwood, M.P. London (Harrison & Sons.)

In this volume the Rev. F. P. Parker continues his edition, commenced in 1909, of Chetwynd's "Collections for a History of Pirehill Hundred." So much fresh material has been discovered since Chetwynd's day, both genealogical and topographical, that the Editor's foot-notes form practically a new history of the Hundred, and the best testimony that can be offered to the valuable work accomplished by the Salt Society is the fact that in compiling these notes Mr. Parker has rarely had to go beyond the evidences contained in previous volumes. In some cases, as in that of the town of Stafford, the notes supply omissions in Chetwynd's Collections, and there are, of course, throughout the volume many corrections of errors made by him.

Among the pedigrees included are those of Adbaston, Aston, Broughton, Charnes, Chetwynd of Ridge, Cotes, D'Oyly, Duston, Fowler of St. Thomas, Hastang, Malvoysin or Mavesyn, Noel of Ellenhall and Hilcote, Peshall, Puylesdon and Wolseley. Mr. Parker's notes on the Mavesyns (pp. 114, 115) are not very clear, and how Cecilia de Cotes could have been heir of her father, Nicholas de Mavesyn, if she had brothers, of whom one left issue, is not easy to understand. The early part of the Wolseley pedigree is very difficult, especially the relationship of Beatrice, wife of Ralph de Hintes, to William, son of Siward de Wolseley, whose widow claimed dower against her and her husband in 1199. We cannot agree that it is possible that the de Hintes family became "'coparceners' of Wolseley under a Saxon tenure," for the Norman laws were paramount. A later difficulty in the same pedigree as to the exact descent of the first Baronet could, one would think, have been settled by a little research. Two ancient grants of arms in Norman French should be noticed, one from Humphrey, Earl of Stafford, to Robert de Whitgreve, dated 13 August 20 Hen. VI., and the other granted in the previous reign by "Edmund" (? Edward) Duke of York to John Brugneford or Bridgeford. Chetwynd's ideas on heraldry are often very quaint, as, for instance, his suggestion that the Naptons of Napton may have charged the Vernon fess with three escallops "in allusion to ye stones of that form frequently found in ye lordship of Napton."

Mr. Josiah Wedgwood, M.P., only commences his review of the Harcourt pedigree, which fills the remainder of this volume, at the period when that ancient house acquired their Staffordshire estates by marriage in King John's reign with the heiress of Ellenhall and Ronton. From that period until the family ceased to own land in the county every link in their descent has been carefully tested and many errors have been detected in The Harcourt Papers and other authorities. In this task Mr. Wedgwood has been much assisted by the Plea Rolls and Final Concords, which have been published by the Salt Society.

Among the corrections made is the true place in the pedigree of the junior branch of Harcourt of Ronton, now shown not to descend, as had been supposed, from the Lewknor heiress. Prefixed to Mr. Wedgwood's article is a large folding chart carrying the pedigree back to A.D. 912, but it does not embody all his suggestions and corrections, nor does it show, as we should have expected, the descent of the Harcourts of Ankerwycke, the only known branch of the family remaining in the male line.

THE RECORD SOCIETY FOR THE PUBLICATION OF ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS RELATING TO LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE. Vol. LXX. LANCASHIRE INQUESTS, EXTENTS, AND FEUDAL AIDS. Part III., A.D. 1313—A.D. 1355. Edited by William Farrer, Hon. D.Litt. (Printed for The Record Society.)

Owing to the War only one volume has been issued this year by the Lancashire and Cheshire Record Society, but it is one which will be of great interest to the subscribers, being the continuation of Mr. Farrer's abstracts of Lancashire Inquisitions, Rentals and Extents. Nearly half the volume is taken up with an extent of the lands and tenements of the Earl of Lancaster in 1346, and the Minister's Account of 1348. The first of these has been printed from a copy in the British Museum (Add. MS. 32103), which has been carefully corrected from other sources indicated in the Editorial Introduction. It is full of most interesting details relating to the services of tenants and the customs then prevailing in the county, and also gives the names of the burgesses of Liverpool at the period, of whom Roger de la More was evidently the most important, holding eight burgages, the largest number in the list. The extent also includes the names of the principal tenants in the Wapentakes of West Derby, Salford, Amounderness and Lonsdale. The rest of the volume is occupied with various inquests and claims, such as Inquisitiones Post Mortem and Ad Quod Damnum; enquiries as to whether lands of persons outlawed for felony had been duly seized into the King's hands for a year and a day according to law; claims to be entitled to puture; and commissions concerning dower. Among these last is the successful petition in 1325 of Joan, wife of William de Multon, whose first husband, William de Holande, had been implicated with the Earl of Lancaster in the death of Piers Gaveston, his brother and heir, Robert de Holande, being at the time of the claim a prisoner in Warwick Castle.

Many, of course, are the traces of the great upheaval caused in Lancashire by the forfeiture of the Earl of Lancaster and his followers in 1322, which brought such a vast amount of land into the king's hands, as did also, to a lesser degree, the adherence of the de Coucys to the King of France a little later on. The Inquisition on Christiana de Gynes or Ghisnes, widow of Ingelram de Coucy, is printed on pp. 32-36. She was daughter of Sir William de Lindsay by Ada, sister of John Baliol, King of Scotland.

The Jurors at an inquest, taken at Lancaster, 13 March, 1326-7, decided that it would not be to his loss, "but to the great alleviation and safeguard of the people if the king grants to the Abbot of Furness that he and his successors shall have their own coroner." The Abbot had complained of the great danger experienced in crossing the sands between Furness and the town of Lancaster at the ebb of the sea.

The most interesting enquiry in the volume is the investigation into the circumstances attending the seizure of Margery, widow of Nicholas de la Beche, and wife of Gerard de L'Isle, before dawn on Good Friday, 1347, from her manor of Beaumes in Berkshire, where the Keeper of the Kingdom, the youthful Prince Lionel, afterwards Duke of Clarence, was then staying. Her captor, Sir John de Dalton, took her to Lancashire, and on the 9th of April following went through a form of marriage with her. In his Introduction, the Editor disposes of certain baseless charges against the religious orders founded on this story, which were printed by Roby in his Traditions of Lancashire.

Mr. Farrer has throughout supplied many extracts from the Patent and Close Rolls, which refer to the same matters dealt with in the inquests, and the "Index of Things" will be found a valuable guide to the curious customs and services of tenants recorded in the extent of 1346. There is also a carefully compiled Index of Names and Places.

VISITATION OF ENGLAND AND WALES. Edited by Frederick Arthur Crisp. Notes, Vol. 11. (Privately printed.)

Mr. Crisp's "Notes" are even more interesting than the Visitation itself, and this volume displays the same accuracy of detail for which he has an established reputation. Prominent among the families whose earlier ancestry is here traced, and whose more recent descent is to be found in the Visitation, are those of two of our national heroes, Horatio, Lord Nelson, and Robert, Lord Clive, while the pedigree of the poet Tennyson, whose peerage scarcely added lustre to his literary fame, is no less interesting. Of noble families bearing titles dating long before the lavish scattering of peerages which has prevailed during the last two reigns, there are three in this volume, the Fitzwilliams, Earls Fitzwilliam, Grevilles, Earls of Warwick and Lumleys, Earls of Scarborough. By commencing the Fitzwilliam descent with the father of Wolsey's treasurer, Sir William Fitzwilliam, a London Alderman, many difficulties connected with the early pedigree are avoided, and the gradual rise to wealth and importance of the Fitzwilliams of Milton is of considerable interest. Sir Christopher Wren's connection with this family, through his second marriage, is worthy of notice.

The part taken by the first Earl of Scarborough in the suppression of Monmouth's rebellion, and afterwards at the Revolution, together with the military services of his brother, General Henry Lumley, who was engaged in no less than twenty campaigns, add distinction to their ancient pedigree.

The descent in the male line of the present Earl Nelson from the Boltons of Suffolk has already been printed by the late Dr. Muskett in his Suffolk Manorial Families, together with the evidences for the same, but we are glad to see it repeated here, arranged in Mr. Crisp's clear and detailed method. Another remarkable family whose story, though familiar to genealogists, well bears repetition is that of Thellusson, the pedigree being carried to Symphorien Thellusson of Geneva, who, being of French origin, was naturalized there in 1572.

In two cases, Brassey and Gidley, the descents are expressly stated to have been extracted from the records of the College of Arms. When a man is well known to have been the architect of his own fortunes, as the founder of the prosperity now enjoyed by the Brasseys undoubtedly was, there is a natural inclination to doubt the truth of a long pedigree claimed by his descendants, and it is satisfactory, therefore, to have the authority of the Heralds' Office for the descent of this family from a good old Cheshire stock, the pedigree having been recorded in the Visitations for that County in 1613 and 1663. The Grant of Arms to Bartholomew and John Gidley in 1666 is set out in full. From the Barrys of Fordingbridge, for many generations Hampshire yeomen, came the well known architect, Sir Charles Barry, the portcullis in the family arms referring, no doubt, to his share in the building of the Houses of Parliament.

It is interesting to observe how some families have continued in one county from the beginning of their history to the present day, while others have frequently moved from one part of England to another. Of these migratory families there are two notable instances in this volume, both of some antiquity, the Darells of Trewornan, who went from Sussex to Nottinghamshire and then to Cornwall, and the Gowers, originally of Worcestershire and then of Kent.

The principal illustration contained in the volume is a representation of a coffin in Wimborne Minster belonging to the Ettricks of Barford, with their arms and those of some allied families painted thereon.

In conclusion, attention may be drawn to the facilities which Mr. Crisp gives both in his Visitation and in the Notes for recording portraits with the names of the artists where known. This will be found of the greatest use to future generations, for a collection of portraits, however ancient, is of little interest unless the ancestors represented and the artists who painted them can be identified.

PHILLIMORE'S PARISH REGISTER INDEX SERIES. CORNWALL PARISH REGISTERS. MARRIAGES. Index to Vols. I-VI. Compiled by A. Terry Satterford. London (Phillimore & Co., Ltd., 124, Chancery Lane).

It is now fifteen years ago since this series of Marriage Registers was commenced by the late Mr. Phillimore, and during that period 225 volumes have been issued, giving the marriages of no less than 2,500,000 persons. None of these volumes have hitherto been in any way indexed, and the searcher has had to make his way through them unaided, with the result, it is to be feared, that he has, unless very keen, abandoned the task in despair. We are, therefore, heartily glad to welcome this first attempt to remove what has undoubtedly been a drawback to the success of a scheme which deserves support from all genealogists. An index is now provided to the Marriages in the forty-six parishes comprised in the first six of the twenty-four volumes of which the series for Cornwall consists, and the work has been most carefully performed by Mr. A. Terry Satterford as a labour of love. Another volume, also by him, is, we understand, in the press. This index gives christian as well as surnames, and the parish where each marriage was celebrated can be ascertained by a glance at the table placed at the commencement of the volume.

Almanacks for Students of English History. By Edward Alexander Fry. London (Phillimore & Co., Ltd., 124, Chancery Lane).

This most ingenious method of ascertaining the correct date of ancient documents, with actually no trouble whatever to the student, should be in the possession of every antiquary, and will in fact, be found indispensable. The plan seems so clear and simple that it is difficult to realize how much labour has been involved in its elaboration. Most English charters were dated by the regnal year of the sovereign and the name of the Feast Day on which, or within a specified number of days from which, the document was executed. We look then first at the long list of Saints' Days and other Feast Days on pp. 83-94 to ascertain the particular day in question, then at the tables of Regnal Years on pp. 108-132 and find the right year, after which we refer to the thirty-five almanacks on pp. 74-78, arranged for every day upon which Easter can fall, and at once the exact date required appears. The troublesome search for the Dominical letter is thus avoided, and a separate arrangement has been made for leap years. The scheme is based on the fact that new style was not adopted in this country until 1752, and the almanacks, therefore, only apply to Great Britain. A special table is provided for the year 1752, and another for such countries as adopted New style in 1582. At the end is a Roman and Church Calendar, by which, if a date be expressed in the method of ancient Rome, its exact mediæval equivalent can be at once ascertained. There is also a list of Popes from 1061 to the present time.

Fleetwood Family Records. Collected and edited by R. W. Buss. (Privately printed.) Part IV., September, 1915.

This part of Mr. Buss' "Fleetwood Records" did not unfortunately reach us in time to be noticed in the last number of The Genealogist. Among its contents is a pedigree showing the descent of the wife of Field-Marshal Viscount French of Ypres from the Fleetwoods, through the families of Ansell, Goostrey and Selby-Lowndes. There is also a descent of the Fleetwoods from the Vikings, in which, of course, all descendants of Rollo, Duke of Normandy, share. An account follows of General George Fleetwood, a Baron of Sweden and a distinguished soldier (born 1605, died 1667), together with a most interesting letter from the General to his father, Sir Miles Fleetwood, describing the battle of Lutzen.

Notes and Queries.

MONCEUX FAMILY.—According to the account of the Monceux family, as given in the "Sussex Archæological Collections," Vol. iv, the first mentioned is Drew de Monceux, who appears on the Pipe Roll of 31 Henry I. His wife was Edith, daughter of Earl Warren. The arms of Drew de Monceux were, Or, a bend Sable. Ingelram de Monceux is the next of the family whose name occurs. Sir John Monceaux, Lord of Hurstmonceux, had a daughter Maud, who married Sir John de Fiennes, and so carried the property of Hurstmonceux into the family of Fiennes. Walran de Monmels bore for his arms—Argent, a bend Sable (Acre Roll, Harl. MS., 6137). There seems to be some close connection between Drew de Monceux and Walran. Landric IV became Count of Nevers circa 990 by marriage, and had a younger son, Landric of Nevers, Baron of Monceaux, grandfather of William de Monceaux, who is mentioned by Wace 1066 (The Norman People). Forscote, Fosscot, or Foscecote, in the county of Somerset, was held by William de Munrellis, or Monceaux (History and Antiquities of the County of Somerset, by John Collinson, vol. iii).

I should be most grateful if anyone could supply me with the following information about the Monceaux family :—

(1) The relationship between William de Monceaux mentioned by Wace 1066, and Drew de Monceux.

(2) What connection was there between Walran Monceaux, Ingelram de Monceaux, and Drew de Monceaux ?

R. W. MUNCEY.

REV. THOMAS WILSON.—Information is desired concerning this well-known Rector of St. George's, Canterbury, author of the first Concordance of the Bible. He married Christian Ower of Hollingbourne, Kent, and died in 1621. Is there in existence a complete record of his children, with their dates of birth ? I have read his biography in Dict. Nat. Biog., which lacks any exact record of his birth and ancestry.

A LONDON MANUSCRIPT.

Under the title of "Register of Freemen of the City of London in the reigns of Henry VIII and Edward VI," the London and Middlesex Archæological Society in 1908 published an abstract of two manuscripts relating to the City of London, with an introduction by Mr. Charles Welch, F.S.A. The manuscripts, of which one is now in the British Museum (2408 Egerton) and the other at the Guildhall (MS. 512) were claimed by the editor as all that remained of the Admission Registers of Freemen of the City of London after the Fire of 7 February 1786 at the Chamberlain's house at Guildhall. In his introduction, referring mainly to the Egerton manuscript, he remarks : "This period (over which the entries extend) may be roughly put down as from 1524 to 1553, but a glance at any page will show how difficult, if not impossible, it is to arrive at an exact conclusion on this point. The absence of chronological order, or of any perceivable system, in the arrangement of the entries, together with the fragmentary character of the entries themselves, makes it impossible to determine the exact age of the manuscript. The great bulk of the entries belong to the last twelve years of Henry VIII and the first five years of Edward VI, but there are many of earlier and later date." It is obvious that for purposes of research such a haphazard series of entries extending over a long period and containing perhaps one-twentieth of the total admissions of that period, is of no great value, and my present object is to endeavour to show that these entries were made from day to day in chronological order and are the complete record for the year 1552 (Dec. 1551—26 Jan. 1552-3).

In its present form the manuscript consists of thirty vellum folios that have been inlaid and bound, and the abstracts, as printed, follow the order of the original, the folios being numbered in the margin 1 to 30 (in the original they are numbered 2 to 31), and the second page of each folio marked "b," "f. 1," "f. 1 b," etc. The editor offers no criticism as to this order but as regards each folio says : "There is apparently no means of ascertaining which is the recto and which the verso of each leaf, nor does the arrangement of the contents of the book throw any light that I can discover upon this point."

As the printed abstracts have been made with accuracy and skill they are amply sufficient without further reference to the original for all internal evidence of date. The first entry (p. 2), that of Robert Grenewood, has "Adm. . . . ." and each succeeding entry "Adm. on said day and year" till the entry of . . . . Crowe (p. 4, f. 1 b) is reached, which has "Adm., etc., during apprenticeship, 28 Jan. year aforesaid." It will then be seen that every entry after the word "Adm." has either an exact date of day and month or a reference to a foregoing entry in the words "said day and year" ; also each entry contains a second date (in general following the words "Entry N" or "Entry M") of day, month and year, and it is necessary to clearly distinguish between these two dates, of which the first is the date of the entry and the second that of apprenticeship or of "turning over" to the last master with reference to the registers of "bindings" marked "M" and "N," or in the exceptional cases of admission by patrimony, the date of the admission of the new freeman's father. Once it is recognised that the day and month of each entry is given it will be noticed that these are followed by "year aforesaid," thus implying the year is somewhere once stated and not repeated. The nature of the entries themselves would have made this year quite easy of discovery, as many Companies have even earlier records of admissions to their Freedom, and still more have a record of the year of office of the attesting wardens whose names are frequently given; these facts are useful as a check of results, but are in reality rendered unnecessary by the definite date given on page 70: "Sum total from purchases of freedom and admissions to the freedom from Michaelmas 5 Ed. VI to Michaelmas 6 Ed. VI."

Having noted the date (day and month) of each entry, and in particular those at the beginning and end of each folio and page of the original, I came to the conclusion that the present arrangement was faulty, and that the original arrangement could easily be restored. In the first place each folio as at present bound is reversed, that is the page marked "b" in the printed transcript was originally the first page, and the one marked with the plain figure the second, and that originally the name of the ward (to which the editor rightly calls attention) was on the outside margin and not as at present on the inside.

The earliest entry is the first entry on folio 9 b (p. 23) of ". . . . . Skeyles," and is followed by the first dated entry, ". . . . dus Rowell," of which the date is 22 December [1551], and the last entry of this folio (9) is printed immediately before Skeyles and was made 13 Jan. [155½]; the last entry of the manuscript is of "Peter a Calverley" (p. 52, f. 19), dated 26 Jan. [155⅔].

The rearrangement of the folios to restore them to their original order that I should suggest is the following: 9, 2, 4, 1, 10, 3, 5, 6, 8, 7, 16, 17, 29, 14, 23, 22, 27, 30, 12, 18, 13, 25, 21, 26, 11, 28, 24, 15, 20, 19; these numbers being those of the folios in the printed abstracts and one less in each case than the numbers as now marked on the manuscript.

In turning from the Museum to the Guildhall manuscript it is greatly to be regretted that the editor did not (though there is no indication in the introduction that this was not the case), as before, make his own abstracts, but contented himself with printing verbatim and apparently without referring to the original an abstract made about 1850 (possibly by Joseph Hunter), which was acquired with the manuscript, and is far from satisfactory. Owing to the state of the original the difficulties of deciphering are far greater than in the case of the Egerton manuscript, and what has been transcribed is in the main accurate. But a great deal, especially in the earlier folios, that can still be deciphered has been omitted, possibly as being of no importance; the name of the ward is not given in any case, nor is there any indication that it formed part of each entry in the original, neither is there any clue as to the extent of page or folio of the original, nor as to what entries have been omitted as no longer legible. For my present purpose, that of dating the manuscript, the omissions are still more serious: from the printed abstracts I could hardly believe the editor's statement that the two manuscripts were "probably" portions of the same volume; there was absolutely no evidence of the two dates, of entry and apprenticeship, and of only two entries are the dates given, the translation of John Benet to the Blacksmith-Spurriers (p. 95), 9 March "anno supradicto," and the admission of George Nedham (p. 109), "7 June the aforesaid year of King Edward VI"; it was thus with some surprise that after a very short examination of the original I found that the entries corresponded in every particular with those of the Egerton MS., and that the two were undoubtedly portions of the same original register.

There is, however, one important advantage that the printed abstracts of the Guildhall manuscript possess, strict chronological order. The twenty-one leaves of the original, in a frail and fragmentary condition, are now carefully preserved without being mounted or bound, but it is probable that when the abstracts were made they were still as originally sewn together and were afterwards taken apart for the purpose of straightening.

The first six entries (p. 87) are of the "said day and year," the seventh (Richard Paynes) is dated 27 Jan. "year aforesaid" [155$\frac{2}{3}$]; the dates follow in order right through the months till the note printed on page 115 is reached: "De anno regni Illustrissimæ Principis Dnæ Mariæ Dei gratia Angliæ Franciæ et Hiberniæ Reginæ fidei . . . ." which occurs between 5 July and 8 July, and thus, ignoring the reign of Lady Jane Grey, starts the reign of Queen Mary on 6 July [1553]. The condition of the folios becomes worse and worse towards the end, and I am unable to give the date of any entry on folio 21, the last I was able to decipher, on the second page of folio 20, was 18 September [1553] in the entry of Adam Dente (p. 119).

It will be noticed that the last entry of the Egerton manuscript is made on the same day as the first of the Guildhall manuscript, 26 Jan. [155$\frac{2}{3}$]; it is certainly possible that a folio is missing which would bring the number of entries on that day to about thirty, but it is more probable that the first folio of the Guildhall follows immediately the last at the Museum, and the register is practically complete from December 1551 to September 1553.

In examining the original manuscript at the Guildhall my object was to establish the date and not to attempt any revision of the abstracts made, but there are two of the printed entries at least that call for remark from the point of view of chronology—the first (p. 88) is as follows: "William Torre and Thomas Ranscroft, citizens of London, William born March 4, the 1st year of the King's reign, & Thomas born Aug. 20, also of the 1st year of the King's reign were admitted"; the date of this entry is 1 Feb. 7 Edward VI [155$\frac{2}{3}$], and the curious dates of birth are in reality the dates of their admission into the Company of Longbowstring-makers, from which on this day they are translated to the Cordwainers. The second entry is that of William Holgyll's admission to the Carpenters' which ends : "Born May 16, 2 Edw. 6" (p. 90). The date of this entry is 8 Feb. [155$\frac{2}{3}$], and the date of birth is that of apprenticeship as shown in Register "N," which has in this instance been interpreted as an abbreviation of "natus."

As an instance of what may be gained by a re-arrangement of the Egerton manuscript, and a more full abstract (or even verbatim transcript where so much has been lost) of the Guildhall manuscript, the imperfect entry on page 117 may be taken : ". . . . Osborn, son of . . . . . Osborn, of Ashford, co. Lanc., yeoman, apprenticed to William . . . . N. Dec. 18, 3 Ed. VI" ; "Lanc." should be Kent (Kanc), and this is probably the admission of Sir Edward Osborne, the celebrated ancestor of the Dukes of Leeds, and if so supplies two dates in his history that have hitherto been a matter of conjecture, his apprenticeship to Sir William Hewett, 18 December 1549, and admission to the Freedom (21-29) July 1553.

BOWER MARSH.

ORIGIN OF THE TITLE OF THE KNIGHTS TEMPLARS TO THE SITE OF THE NEW TEMPLE AND OF THE EARLS OF LEICESTER AND LANCASTER AS OVERLORDS.

The Knights Templars established the chief house of their Order in England in "Oldbourne" about the year 1128.[1] Some time before the year 1184 they removed from "Oldbourne" to the south side of Fleet Street, "super litus Thamisie," where they built their church. The Round was consecrated in February 1185 (modern style 1186) and the choir in the year 1240. The old house became known as the Old Temple to distinguish it from the new house on the south side of Fleet Street, which was then called the New Temple. How the Templars' title to the Old Temple or to the New Temple precisely originated antiquaries have not yet discovered. Nor has it been discovered when and by what grant the site of the Temple (the Old and New probably simultaneously) had previously become parcel of the Barony or Honour of Leicester.

The Abbey of St. Peter's, Westminster, is believed to have been founded in the seventh century. The Manor of this Benedictine Monastery was formerly very extensive, reaching as far as Kensington and Chelsea westward, to the boundary of the City of London eastward, to the River Thames southward, and to Marylebone northward.[2] The Manor included the precincts of the Savoy, the entire area of St. Mary le Strand and St. Clements Danes, and part of St. Giles and St. Andrews, Holborn. In the year 1162,[3] during the Chancellorship of Thomas a Becket (who attested the grant as chancellor at Villemur) Henry II granted to the Templars a place situate on the River Fleet near Bainard's Castle with the whole current of the river at London for erecting a mill,[4] also a messuage near Fleet Street, the Church of St. Clements "quae dicitur Dacorum extra civitatem Londoniae."[5] The Carmelites, the White Friars and Black Friars, the Bishop of Salisbury,[6] and Henry Lacy Earl of Lincoln complained to the King of the nuisance from stench by reason of the Templars diverting the stream.

Moreover it appears from the Inquisitio Terrarum of the Templars' lands in England made in the year 1185, "per fratrem Galfridum filium Stephani," on the Templars removing to the New Temple that they had acquired by gift from Gervase de Cornhill, who was Sheriff of London early in the reign of Henry II,[7] a "mesagium pro v^s," etc., "apud Flete De feodo comitis Leicestriae."

These grants seem to indicate that prior to 1185 the Templars owned the site of the New Temple.

The curtailment of the Manor of the Abbey was further effected through the influence of Stephen Langton in 1222 (6 Hen. III). The policy of Rome had previously, for many years, been to supersede the authority of the Benedictines by the Cistercians, a reformed congregation of the Benedictine Order. The active mission of the Benedictines in England was prior to 1222 drawing to its close and the mission of the Mendicant or Preaching Friars, the Black or Austin Friars or Dominicans, the White Friars or Carmelites, and the Grey Friars or Franciscans, had become established.

The spoliation of many of the monasteries after the Conquest and in the time of Henry II enabled the King to make grants to his Barons, and probably the title of the Earls of Leicester may date from this period. The term "Honour" or "Barony" was used to describe the lands held of the King by one of his mightier tenants by service of a certain number of knights. The "Honour" might consist of a large number of Manors scattered about in various counties, though some Castle or Manor was accounted its head. The Manors were either in the immediate possession of the lord or were granted by him to under-tenants, who, without diminishing the liability of the Baron for the entire number of the knights of the fees he held under one title, became answerable in their turn to the Baron for a certain number of knights who together might exceed the number for which the Baron was accountable to the King."[8]

In the year 1168 Robert de Beaumont was by Charter of Henry II recognised as Earl of Leicester. He was the son of another Robert de Beaumont, sometimes, though perhaps erroneously, called Earl of Leicester.[9] Robert de Beaumont Earl of Leicester (1168) was a crusader, and was drowned (31 August 1190) on voyage to the third crusade, the same year that Barbarossa (Emp. Frederick 1st) was drowned in a Cilician river while on the like mission. Having regard to the dates, probably the title of the Templars to the Old and to the New Temple as held of the Honour of Leicester was confirmed by Robert de Beaumont the father or by his son Robert de Beaumont Earl of Leicester (1168). The liberty or district known as the New Temple would not have been rightly called the Manor of the Temple until the "aula," house or hall, had been erected.

On the death of Robert de Beaumont Earl of Leicester in 1190 his son Robert was invested with the Earldom (1 February 1191), and acted as Steward of England at the coronation of King John (1199). He died s.p. 6 January 1204, when the Earldom lapsed to the Crown and was confirmed by King John (1207) to Simon de Montfort, the father of Simon de Montfort who with his eldest son Henry was slain at the battle of Evesham (1265). Edmund Plantagenet, a younger son of King Henry III, was then (1265) created Earl of Leicester and Steward of England, which dignities were confirmed to him by charter of King Edward I (1274). He was created Earl of Lancaster in the year 1267 and died 1296.[10]

MONUMENTAL AND OTHER INSCRIPTIONS IN THE CHURCH AND CHURCHYARD OF MARDALE, IN THE COUNTY OF WESTMORLAND, COPIED IN AUGUST, 1896.

Contributed by J. PAUL RYLANDS, F.S.A.

Mardale Chapelry was formed out of parts of the parishes of Shap and Bampton. The old church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, stands, in the parish of Shap, at the end of a secluded and picturesque valley among mountains. It is one of the smallest of the Lake District churches, measuring inside only 30 by 16 feet; its windows are very small openings in the strongly-built walls, which are 40 inches in thickness, and the axe-hewn roof timbers are probably coeval with the walls. The central oak roof-beam which is arched, as the others are, stands out of position so that it would clear the windows in the north and south walls. The east window is of more recent date. Unfortunately there are no architectural details by which the date of the building may be determined, but it is supposed to have been standing before the Reformation. In the consecration deed of the churchyard, dated 1728, it is stated that divine service had been performed in the church from time immemorial, and some fine yew trees, said by experts to be four or five centuries old, suggest a great age for the building.

[10] See "Complete Peerage," ubi sup.

In 1737 various alterations were made; it was then that the gallery at the west end was erected and two ancient oak benches were taken there from below. At this time the screen and communion-rail were fashioned from old oak, and probably the tower was built; it was let into the west wall to admit of making a west end doorway in place of that in the south wall which was then built up, and also to allow the making of a staircase to the gallery. The doorway to the tower, and a bell, dated 1825, are later additions. The church was restored in 1858.

Although the parish registers date from 1628, the earliest burial took place in 1725; before that time the dead were carried over the hills to Shap, the coffin being tied on a horse, frequently in a kind of cradle, and the path by which funerals went over Swindale to Shap is still known as the "Kirk-gate" or the "Corpse-road."

Many of the Mardale ministers, of whom nineteen are known since 1703, were masters of the neighbouring Measand Grammar School, founded by Richard Wright and Richard Law, yeomen, in 1711, on the banks of Haweswater, now used as a cottage. Of these ministers, Jonathan Tinclar (presented in 1722) founded and endowed a library in 1750, which is now kept at Bampton Vicarage; Richard Hebson (presented in 1749) is commemorated by a tablet on the north wall; John Bowstead (presented in 1800) educated at least two hundred priests of the Church of England, among whom was his nephew, James Bowstead, Bishop of Lichfield, 1840-1843; and Thomas Holme (presented in 1858) restored the church and built the parsonage house as a gift to the living.

The above particulars have been kindly communicated by the Rev. F. H. J. Barham, Vicar of Mardale, who has also supplied some dubious dates in the monumental inscriptions.

Most of the inscriptions printed below commemorate members of the Holme family, one of those ancient Lake District yeomen stocks, locally called "statesmen," which are fast disappearing. The head of this family, for several, if not many, generations, has been known in the neighbourhood by the soubriquet of "the King of Mardale," and curious legends were told by the dalesmen of the great antiquity of this race. There can be very little doubt that the Holmes have been settled on a small estate in Mardale for a very long period, and that the name of their older house, "Chapel Hill," near to the church, was its designation in 1670 is clear from an entry in the Shap parish registers. The present house, called "Chapel Hill," is on a different site.

No printed account of the Holmes of Mardale is extant, their name does not occur in the Visitation of Westmorland made by Sir Richard St. George, Norroy, in 1615, and their true origin appears to be unknown. There are several places called Holme in this county and in Cumberland and Yorkshire, which may have given surnames to distinct families. Nicolson and Burn, in their History of Westmorland and Cumberland, (1777) mention Henry de Holme as Vicar of the neighbouring parish of Askham in 1357, and the Rev. Canon Holmes, in a letter printed in the "Penrith Observer" of the 4th January 1916, refers to a John Holme, of Askham, who was living in the reign of Henry VII. From the Bampton parish register it appears that the Rev. Richard Holme, Rector of Lowther and Prebendary of Carlisle, superintended the building of Bampton Vicarage in 1727, and was present at the consecration of a rebuilt church there in the following year. Possibly he was a Holme of Bampton, and three other members of that family were educated at Queen's College, Oxford, in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, namely, John, M.A. 1685, Vicar of Holme Cultram with Newbon, co. Cumberland, in 1687; Richard, M.A. 1730, and Thomas, who matriculated in 1755. The Bampton Holmes were numerous, and no less than eleven of them were pew-holders in Bampton Church in 1726; of these several were of Riggindale and of Measand and so may well have been kinsmen of the Mardale Holmes.

OSBERT THE SHERIFF.

By W. H. B. Bird.

IV.

Besides the line which we have hitherto been engaged in tracing, there were a good many individuals and families in Lincolnshire, Yorkshire and neighbouring counties named Chamberlain (Camerarius) or de Camera ; and before leaving the subject it may be of interest to add a note concerning a few of these. One must not too hastily assume that all or any of them were descendants of Osbert the Sheriff. Thus, when we read in the Testa de Nevill[162] that Count Conan gave to Wimar the Chamberlain lands in Grainthorp and Yarborough, the probability is that Wimar was chamberlain in the Count's own household. No doubt other great families, such as Gaunt and Percy, as well as the Bishops and Archbishops, had chamberlains of their own, whether they used the title of their office as a surname or not.

There was, for example, a family of Chamberlain of some consequence seated at Edlington. In 1212[163] John Chamberlain held land there.

[162] p. 338
[163] Testa de Nevill, p. 335.

Sir John Chamberlain of Edlington, who flourished in the reign of Edward I, seems to have succeeded to the estate formerly of Alan de Mumby at Mumby. Simon Chamberlain succeeded him, and was Sheriff 1322-4, dying without issue in 1329,[164] when he was succeeded by Robert his brother, aged 50; and that or another Robert occurs as late as 1342 and 1346.[165] I believe these were in no way connected with the Chamberlains of Wickenby.

When however men of the same name are found to be tenants of the Chamberlains, it is reasonable to suppose that they are also kinsmen. Such were William Chamberlain, who was dead in 1223, and Ralph his son, whose mother Isabel was then in dispute with Robert Chamberlain of Wickenby about his wardship.[166] Where his lands lay does not appear; but in 1266 another William Chamberlain was (among others) sued for dower in Marston by Sir John Chamberlain's widow.[167] This last, or perhaps a third William, had forty years earlier acted as attorney for Alina Chamberlain in a similar suit.[168]

At Reston and Carlton also Chamberlain of Wickenby had Chamberlains for tenants. The survey of 1212 fails to give the names of the tenants there. A Roger Chamberlain, one of the defendants in 1226 to Alina's suit for dower, was perhaps of this family. The survey of 1243 names William Chamberlain.[169] Some thirty years later a William Chamberlain of Reston fines for a respite of knighthood,[170] shewing that these were people of good estate. That William or another was living in 1303; and in 1346 his successor was Richard Chamberlain.[171]

The Carlton just mentioned is in the Wapentake of Louth Eske in Lindsey. In the Wapentake of Graffoe in Kesteven is another Carlton, and there we find in the Hundred Rolls mention of a Roger Chamberlain among the tenants of Brus. This Roger was brother and heir of the Walter Chamberlain of Haddington whose name will be found in the survey of 1243.[172] He had interests also at Morton and Bassingham in the same Wapentake[173]; and appears to have sold some of his lands.[174] In 1303, however, a Robert Chamberlain is holding lands in Haddington formerly of Walter.[175]

Another Walter, son of Hugh Chamberlain, was of Heckington, and married Helen daughter of Robert de Gant. Several deeds of his are among the Lincoln Cathedral Charters printed by the late

Mr. Massingberd.[176] He dates them all roughly "after 1200"; and three out of four are witnessed by Thomas English (Anglicus, Lengleis), probably the man of that name who died in 1226. Another witness is Thomas Chamberlain of Hale, probably the Thomas son of John Chamberlain of Little Hale whose charter will be found in the same collection. In 1212 Simon Chamberlain held land in Little Hale of the fee of Gant.[177] Walter son of Hugh was also a benefactor to Bardney Abbey.[178]

To return to Osbert's descendants, in the same Pipe Roll in which Stephen Chamberlain first occurs, a Robert son of Melisent will be found, also fining for a writ in Yorkshire.[179] Was he perhaps a brother of Stephen? There was at any rate a Robert Chamberlain in Yorkshire about that time, who seems to have left daughters and coheirs; for in a Yorkshire fine of 1204,[180] after the death of his daughter Maud, two nephews of hers named Fulk son of Theobald and Geoffrey Chasemuine are sharing her lands. It may be merely a coincidence, but she had for tenant at Skefflling in Holderness Ralph son of Stephen de Hoiland, who has already been mentioned[181] as a neighbour and perhaps a tenant, if not a son, of Stephen Chamberlain. We may note in passing the names of Gilbert[182] and Peter Chamberlain[183] in Yorkshire, and Sefred Chamberlain in Lincolnshire,[184] which occur in the Pipe Rolls during the reign of Henry II; also an Osbert son of Herbert[185] in Essex and Hertfordshire, of whom one would be glad to learn more.

The Kirkstead Chartulary introduces another family at Snelland who may possibly be descendants of the Chamberlain either in the male or female line, as the double association with Snelland and Wickenby suggests. John de Wikynkebi,[186] who occurs in 1167, had a wife Wimarca[187] who survived him, and a son Helte de Snelleslund,[188] who is described as patron of Snelland church. John had a brother William, uncle of Helte[189]; and Helte himself had a brother William, also called William son of Wimarca.[190] Helte's wife Margaret survived him.[191] They had a son Robert de Snelleslund, who was living in 1245.[192]

Again, there was in Lincolnshire one Stephen de Camera, whose daughter Desiderata seems to have been his heir. King John, we are told, gave her in marriage to Hugh Neville, whose son Ernisius Neville in 1235 fines for Stephen's lands,[193] and at the same time is granted a market and fair at Glanford Brigg.[194] Was Stephen a son of Stephen Chamberlain of Wickenby? Ernisius, we learn from the Hundred Rolls,[195] made a gift of land in Newton to Bullington priory; William his son gave land there to the Templars, and the priory of St. Katherine, Lincoln; and at the date of the record Robert Neville held a mesne lordship there under Henry Chamberlain.

The town of Selby in Yorkshire was the home of another family of Chamberlain, of whom some mention will be found in the Coucher Book of Selby Abbey, printed by the Yorkshire Archæological Association. We will not now therefore linger over them; but will pass to another group at and near Scampton in Lincolnshire, my knowledge of whom is again derived from the Kirkstead Chartulary.

The first of this family of whom I find mention is Emma wife of Walter Chamberlain. Her parentage is not mentioned; but she had a maritagium in Scampton, and some of her land there was held of Geoffrey son of Stephen as head of the order of Templars in England.[196] She outlived her husband, and it would seem her eldest son Hugh also; for while he joins in some of her benefactions,[197] in others his son Walter joins with her, being styled her grandson and heir,[198] or else confirms them. Hugh is perhaps the Hugh son of Emma who occurs in the Pipe Roll of 1 Richard I. He had a younger brother Thomas Chamberlain of Thorp, who witnesses charters of his mother[199] and nephew,[200] and himself makes or confirms gifts of land in Scampton,[201] while Walter the nephew grants to the Abbey service due from his uncle.[202] Gilbert son of Thomas, who occurs later as a witness,[203] was perhaps his son, and identical with the Gilbert Chamberlain who is met with elsewhere.[204] There is also a charter of confirmation by Andrew, another son of Hugh, perhaps the person who also occurs as Andrew the clerk.[205]

There is nothing here to suggest a connection with the house of Wickenby, unless it be the rather unusual name Andrew, in which one may possibly see some indication of Scottish memories.

In the Harleian collection at the British Museum is a charter of Stephen Chamberlain, dating from 1187-1191, to which is attached the fragment of an equestrian seal; another of Henry Chamberlain (1194-1225) also bears an equestrian seal with counterseal, smaller and more perfect[206]; but no armorial device can be traced on the shield of either. What we learn, however, from other sources seems to me to form a not uninteresting chapter in the history of heraldry.

The descent I have traced in previous pages is that of a line of simple knights, of no exceptional wealth or power. Except for the purchase of Drax, generation after generation they added nothing to their patrimony either by rich marriages, by court favour, or by successful careers in business, administration or war. On the contrary we have seen their estate steadily dwindling by division, by subinfeudation, by benefactions to the Church, by ill success in litigation and in the pursuit of arms. But it must not be forgotten that the founder of their house was a man of rank, position and great possessions.

Herbert lived and died rather before the epoch which, as the best authorities tell us, marks the dawn of heraldry. But in virtue of his eminence, we need not be surprised to find the arms assumed by his representatives referred back to him at a later date; or that with estate yet unimpaired, and the reflection of his glory undiminished, they presently assumed a coat of the noblest colour and metal and the most distinguished form. In early rolls of arms[207] will be found the coat gules three escallops of gold attributed to Sir Robert Chamberlain, Sir John Chamberlain of Lincolnshire, and Herbert Chamberlain; also to a certain Martin Chamberlain. Now this is one of those which must be considered a primary or founder's coat—one which might be diminished but hardly augmented, one from which others may be derived, but is itself derived from none.

[207] By the kindness of a friend, who has made a special study of Rolls of Arms, I had hoped to be in a position to give precise references and approximate dates; but owing to an unfortunate accident I am at present unable to do so, and can only support the statements that follow by citing Papworth or other books of inferior authority. To the best of my recollection, however, what has been printed agreed in this case with the careful extracts from the originals which my friend shewed me.

A generation later, and the line of the first Sir Robert and Sir John is extinct; the representation and lands pass to a second house. In rolls of their time will be found a coat differenced by a new charge: gules, a fess between three escallops of gold, attributed to Sir Robert and Sir John Chamberlain (of Wickenby and Drax). It is instructive to note the practice at that date. The second house does not revert to the paternal coat—the bearing of the elder line—even when the representation has passed to them. But this diminished coat is itself one of no small heraldic consequence, as may be seen by comparing it, for example, with that of the noble family of Beauchamp.

A third form of the arms is also found in which a chevron replaces the fess. One may say at a glance, if this also be authenticated and ancient, it should be borne by a branch of the same family. Several examples of it may be seen upon seals of a family named Chamberlain seated at Cotes and Denford in Northamptonshire, which will be found in the Catalogue of Seals in the British Museum collections. I believe the Chamberlains of Cotes may be traced back to Reston, where (as we have already noticed) they were tenants of Chamberlain of Wickenby, and presumably of the same blood; indeed in a fourteenth century Roll of Arms the chevron coat is attributed to Sir Richard Chamberlain of Lincolnshire, probably the Richard of 1346.

As regards Martin Chamberlain, his position appears to be altogether anomalous; one can only wonder whether some mistake has not been made. Martin certainly did not represent Herbert the Chamberlain. According to Morant's account[208] he was the son of Jordan Chamberlain, a man of Aubrey de Vere, whom his lord married to Beatrice daughter and heir of one of his tenants. Jordan occurs in an Essex fine[209] of 8 Richard I; Beatrice his widow in another of 2 John, when Roger son of Jordan was her son and heir; and Martin himself in several fines from 13 to 29 Henry III. But we cannot follow Morant in describing him as brother and heir of a John Chamberlain living in 1309, and supposing him to have survived until the accession of Edward III. That was a later Martin, whose age was 18 in 3 Edward II,[210] perhaps grandson of the Jordan Chamberlain who occurs in a fine of 46 Edward III.[211] As tenants (possibly chamberlains) of the Veres, one would rather expect to find these Essex Chamberlains bearing the quarterly coat which is attributed to Sir Simon Chamberlain.

THE ASPINWALL AND ASPINALL FAMILIES OF LANCASHIRE.

By H. O. Aspinall.

Part II.

The Aspinwall family attained a prominent position in Lancashire after removing to Toxteth Park, and during the Interregnum we find its members taking an active and conspicuous part in the politics of those days on the Parliamentarian side. We also find strong religious convictions of that stern Puritan type then so prevalent amongst the followers of Oliver Cromwell. The possession of these characteristics was doubtless the factor which influenced Parliament in appointing several members of the family to act as magistrates, to serve on various Commissions, and to perform other public duties in Lancashire.

It would appear to have been between the years 1596 and 1611 that the family left Aspinwall, near Ormskirk, and went to reside at Toxteth Park. In an account of Toxteth we are told—

> "The custody of the Park was in 1447 granted to Sir Thomas Stanley. This office descended in the Stanley family until 1596, when William Earl of Derby sold the Park with all his lands and tenements there and in Smithdown to Edmund Smolte and Edward Aspinwall (Croxteth D.Aa. 2) who subsequently made a number of grants to kinsmen and others."[36]

Edward Aspinwall (who was the son of William, as we shall presently see) seems to have taken possession of his property shortly afterwards, for if we may trust several old puritan writers, he was certainly residing there in 1611. There is one entry in the Ormskirk registers, amongst the christenings, which may refer to him :—

"Edward Aspinwall 17 Januarie 1567."

Beyond this the registers give us no information, for neither his marriage nor the births of his children are here recorded. A number of facts have been obtained from other sources which appear to relate to him. In the register of the University of Oxford, 1571-1622, we find in a List of Matriculations :—

"23 Apr. 1585. Bras. Aspinwall, Edw. Lancs. pleb. f. 15."

The name "Edr̃us Aspinall de Skaresbrecke g^s" appears in a list of freeholders in Lancashire in 1600, amongst the "Libre Tenentes Infra Hundred de West Derby."[37]

[36] Vic. Hist. of Lancs., vol. iii.
[37] Lancashire and Cheshire Record Society, vol. xii.

In a volume of Lancashire Funeral Certificates,[38] in the certificate relating to Katherine Bretargh, dated 1601 (Lansdowne MS., 879, fo. 7), we read that "Mr. Edward Aspinwall visited her during her sickness and wrote verses on her death."

In the records of the Manchester Quarter Sessions, 1616-1623,[39] under the date March 21st 1620, we find the name "Edrus Aspinall de Toxteth, High Constable for Derbie Hundred."

In Dugdale's "Visitation of Lancashire, 1664-5,"[40] it is shown in the pedigree of Lathom of Whiston that John Lathom of Whiston married "Susanna, daughter of Edward Aspenhall of Aspenhall, Co. Lancaster." He (John Lathom) was fifty-eight years of age on the 8th April 1665. The same pedigree is given in the Familae Minorum Gentium,[41] but here Susanna is described as the daughter of "Edward Aspinwall of Aspinwall, first watchmaker in England."

In January 1634, in the reign of Charles I, the inquisition after the death of Edwardus Aspinwall, late of Toxteth Park, was taken at Wigan. This has not hitherto been printed, but a full abstract of it has been obtained from the original at the Public Record Office, and from this it will be seen that the will of Edward Aspinwall (the original of which has not been found) is recited in the inquisition, and that he died at Toxteth Park on the 26th October 1633.

The jurors say that said Edward died 26 October, 8 Charles I at Toxteth Park & that Jeheriah Aspinwall is his son & heir aged at the taking of this Inquisition 38 years & more.

They say that the premises in Rossacre & Wessham are held of the King, as of his Duchy of Lancaster by knight service & are worth yearly, beyond reprisals, 30*s*.

The premises in Liverpool are held of the King in free & common burgage by fealty & the annual rent of 12*d*. & are worth yearly 2*s*.

And the messuage & 15 acres in Scaresbrick are held of —— [left blank] Hurleston Esq. in socage, by fealty & the annual rent of 6*d*. & are worth yearly 16*d*.

The said Jerehiah has taken the rents & profits of the said lands, &c., since the day of Edward's death till the present time.

Several writers on Lancashire puritanism mention Edward Aspinwall, and from them we get a valuable insight into his character. In Lancashire, its Puritanism and Nonconformity, by Robert Halley, D.D. (1869), we read :—

"We meet with another group of Puritans, although their puritanism seems to have been of a milder type than that of the moorlands, in and around Toxteth Park, near Liverpool. They erected a chapel in which they could hear the evangelical doctrines of the Reformation preached in their purity, and lift up a standard against the popery abounding in their neighbourhood. They invited Richard Mather when a boy to teach their children, and, when only a youth, to teach themselves. Time has spared the name of one of them, . . . Edward Aspinwall, the intimate friend of the sainted Mrs. Brettargh, and her comforter in her last hours of mortal sickness. The Church of Christ has some reason to venerate his memory, for by the influence of his holy conversation, his beautiful example, and his domestic piety the young schoolmaster, Richard Mather, was won over to the puritan cause and prepared for the great work which he did so well in New England. What the Mathers, father and four sons and many grandsons did for New England may, under God, be attributed in no small degree to the holy life of Edward Aspinwall."

A small volume entitled The Life and Death of Mr. Richard Mather, Teacher of the Church in Dorchester in New England (Cambridge, 1670), gives a quaint account of Richard Mather's early life and conversion, and is to the same effect.

Jirehiah Aspinwall was born about 1595, as we learn from the inquisition taken after the death of his father. The earliest mention of him is in the will of William Ambrose, made in February 1637, in which he is named as "my cousin Jirehiah Aspinall." Some years later his name appears in the Royalist Composition Papers, in the case of James Stanley, Earl of Derby, in connection with a contract by Wm. Aspinwall, gentleman, to purchase a fee farm rent of £3 2s. 10d. out of a tenement in the Manor of Trayles, in the occupancy of Jerehiah Aspinwall, late parcel of James late Earl of Derby (21 December 1652). He was a Commissioner for Lancashire (1) under various Assessment Acts to raise monies for the maintenance of the army between 1649 and 1657[42]; (2) for the Church and Parochial Surveys of Lancashire made between 1649 and 1655[43]; and (3) under the "Ordinance for ejecting Scandalous, Ignorant, and Insufficient Ministers and Schoolmasters" of 1654.[42] His curious name, mis-spelt in almost every conceivable way possible, is frequently met with in connection with the records of these Commissions. His signature also appears in the Croston parish registers[44] as officiating at a marriage, under the Act of Parliament of 1653, which enacted that marriages should take place before a magistrate: "1656. These are to certifie . . . that James Cuten . . . and Jane Tomlinson . . . came beefore me Jerehjah Aspnall one of the Justices of the Peace within the said Countie and did contract matrimony together according to the late act in that case made and p'vided. Witness my hand and seal the 8th day of May 1656. Jerehjah Aspanall."

Mention has just been made of the will of William Ambrose. There are three wills of this period which throw light upon the relationship which existed between the Aspinwall family and the Ambrose and Fletcher families. Abstracts of the wills have been printed in Waters' Genealogical Gleanings,[45] and from these we shall select such portions as are helpful to our subject:

William Ambrose, Clerk, of Stepney, Middx. 10 Feb. 1637. Proved 18 June 1638. To my cousin Timothy Aspinwall, Perkins two volumes now in my study and twenty shillings. To my wifes sister Margaret Bouch three pounds. To the children of my uncle Thomas Aspinwall, Samuel, Peter, Elizabeth, Thomas, and the rest, I give five pounds . . . And to Peter Aspinwall I give the money I formerly lent him. To my cousin Thomas Aspinwall (certain household stuff) and five pounds. . . . "my brother Peter Ambrose" . . . "my wife Cicely Ambrose" . . . To my cousin Jirehiah Aspinall a twenty shilling piece. Thomas Aspinwall a witness. (Lee 79.)

PETER AMBROSE, of Toxteth, Lancs, gent., 22 Decr. 1653. Proved 10 Jan. 1653. To Ellen, late wife of Richard Dicconson of Eccleston, daughter of Peter Aspinwall, late of Ormeskirke, ten shillings.

JAMES FLETCHER, Citizen and Haberdasher of London, of par. of St. Lawrence in the Old Jewry, being very aged, etc. 13 Jan. 1654. Proved 22 May 1656. To my sister Alice Fletcher of Ormskirk . . . I give and bequeath unto my nephew William Aspinall minister of Gods word in Lancashire two hundred pounds. Whereas I have heretofore disbursed and paid several sums of money for my nephew Thomas Aspinall and he now oweth me by bond or otherwise two hundred and fifty pounds, I do freely forgive the said debt etc. Certain adventures in Ireland to my nephew Richard Aspinall. Fifty pounds each to the four daughters of my loving sister Elizabeth Aspinall late deceased. . . . The grandchildren of my late sister Elizabeth Aspinall. My cousin William Aspinall's children. My kinsman Thomas Aspinall of Chester now oweth me by bonds one hundred pounds, whereof I give fifty pounds to James Aspinall son to the said Thomas by his now wife (at 21). I give and bequeath unto my loving nephew William Aspinall, minister of Gods word in Lancashire, for and during the term of his natural life, and after his decease to Peter Aspinall, eldest son of the said William, and to the heirs male of his body, etc., remainder to my nephew Thomas Aspinall of Chester, etc., then to the right heirs of the said William Aspinall forever. My two kinsmen Thomas and Samuel Aspinall sons of my nephew Thomas Aspinall of Chester (under 24).

The Ormskirk registers contain a number of entries which go to confirm these wills; two from amongst the marriages are: "Ellis Ambrose & Eliz^th^ Aspinwall, 29 Auguste 1587." "Peter Aspinwall & Elizabeth ffletcher, 18 ffebruarie 1595." An Ellis Ambrose who was "late Vicar of Ormskirk" was buried in 1572, and the name occurs twice again amongst the burials, in 1572 and 1609.

Timothy Aspinwall was at Brasenose, for his name also is found in the List of Matriculations already quoted. His will, made in January 1643 and proved in May 1645,[46] describes him as "Lecturer at St. Michaels in Coventry." The only person named in it, with the exception of a general mention of "any of my brothers," is of "my dearly beloved wife Katherine Aspinwall, who by her carriage, goodness and unwearied pains about me in such a long and tedious sickness hath deserved much more at my hands than I can give her." An Order in Council, dated 3 March 1653-4,[47] tells us that payment of £271 12s. was authorised to be paid to Katherine relict of Timothy Aspinwall, late minister of Coventry, as due to her late husband on account of his charges and arrears as chaplain to Col. Burke's regiment.

Our next record is one of a different character. In Gregson's Portfolio of Fragments there is given the genealogy of John Blackburne, Esq., of Orford and Hale, and we find that a component part of it is a pedigree of several generations of the Aspinwall family:—

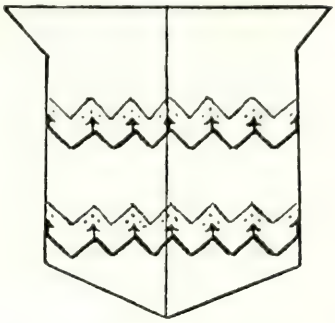
ASPINWALL.



Per pale Gules and Az., two bars dancetté Erminois.[48]

Edward Aspinwall of Hale aforesaid, son and heir, buried the 22 August 1719. = Mary Gardner of London, buried the 17 March 1711.

Eleanor Aspinwall, s.p. = Thomas Crowder (sic), Esq., who died s.p.

Ireland Aspinwall of Hale, baptized 10th March 1703; died unmarried 2nd June 1733, and buried at Hale.

Mary Aspinwall, the only daughter, heir to her brother; died 31 May 1738, aged 41. = Isaac Green, Esq., of Childwall, co. Pal. of Lancaster, died 5 July 1749, aged 71. Lord of Childwall and Hale.

Edward Aspinwall—the one who heads the above pedigree—was, according to the Rev. B. Nightingale,[49] son of the Edward who died in 1633, though he is not mentioned in the latter's will as contained in the I.P.M. printed above. A careful examination of the data available seems rather to denote that he was the son of Jirehiah and grandson of Edward the elder. But as no evidence has been found to settle this point Mr. Nightingale's statement has been accepted and embodied in the pedigree (No. 2) given upon p. 245. The statement appears in an account of the ancient chapel of Toxteth Park, in which Mr. Nightingale names some of the "fathers of Nonconformity" in that neighbourhood, and says: "Edward Aspinwall, 'one of the most considerable landowners in the neighbourhood,' whose son married the sister of Sir Gilbert Ireland of Hale, is described by Dr. Halley as 'the intimate friend of the sainted Mrs. Brettargh,' etc. . . . Mr. Aspinwall was interred in Toxteth Chapel, with whose foundation he had so much to do; and in the main aisle is the stone covering the vault, on which is a brass plate thus inscribed: 'Edward Aspinwall, of Tocksteth Park, Esquire. Departed this life in March, the Twenty-ninth A.D. 1656.'"

In the main portion of his account Mr. Nightingale is speaking of Edward Aspinwall the elder, but the inscription on the brass plate relates to Edward the younger.

[48] This is the correct blazon as given in the books of the College of Arms. Gregson gives Paly Gules and Az., over all a fess dancetté Erminois, which does not accord with the illustration which he supplies, and is, of course, quite wrong.

[49] Lancs Nonconformity, Rev. B. Nightingale.

The marriage of Edward Aspinwall with Eleanor, the sister of Sir Gilbert Ireland, is noticed by several writers, and would seem to have taken place about 1630-40. In addition to the record in Gregson's pedigree, it is noted in Dugdale's "Visitation of Lancashire," 1664-5,[50] in the pedigree of Ireland of Hutt, and Baines has the following note in his account of Aughton parish:[51] "Aspinwall, or as it is here called Aspall Lane, was the paternal inheritance of Edward Aspinwall, esq., on whose marriage with Eleanor, daughter and heiress of John and co-heiress of Sir Gilbert Ireland, the family removed to Hale."

On the 27th September 1650, Major Edward Aspinwall was added to the Militia Commissioners for Lancashire[51]: "Lancaster—F Troop. Lieut.-Col.—Edward Aspinwall. Major—John Fox. Capt.—Croft. Under Ireland."

On the 10th September 1651 an Order of the Committee for compounding "that Edward Aspinwall be a Commissioner for Co. Lancaster" was made, and on the same date a letter was sent him requesting his acceptance of the employment. His reply is given: "October 7th. Warrington. Edward Aspinwall to the Committee for Compounding. I gladly embrace your commission to be one of the Committee for Co. Lancaster and have been to a meeting at Preston, where the other Commissioners cheerfully accepted me. I will show fidelity in the public business."

A letter dated the 11th July 1653 from Lawrence Owen, Rushin Castle, to Lieut.-Col. Aspinwall, Toxteth Park, has reference to the taking and seizing of goods in Peel Castle, "lately belonging to the Earl of Derby."[52]

The parish registers of the church at Walton-on-the-Hill[53] contain the record of a marriage on the 2nd of May 1654, which took place before him as magistrate acting under the Act already mentioned. They also contain records of the christening of two of his children, and reveal a flaw in Gregson's pedigree: "Toxteth. Eleanor, d. of Edward Aspinwall, Esq. 23 January 1654." "Toxteth. Mary, d. of Edward Aspinwall, 6 March 1655." His death took place two years before that of Cromwell, and four years before the Restoration. His burial is duly recorded in the same registers: "Toxteth. Edward Aspinwall, Esq. 1 Aprill 1656."

A number of records have been found which both correct and amplify Gregson's pedigree. Several of them relate to Edward Aspinwall's family, which consisted of two sons and two daughters, and perhaps other children. The Gray's Inn Admission Register (1521-1887) shows he had a son Edward: "1666, Decr. 18. Edward Aspinwall, second son of Edward Aspinwall, late of Toxteth Park, Lanc., Esq., deceased."

The marriage of his daughter Mary is recorded in the registers of St. Nicholas Church, Liverpool[54]: "Thomas Bramhall of Maxfild and Mary Aspinwall of Livrpoole by Lycence dat. 18th inst. 20 Novembr 1681."

The Exchequer Depositions (1558-1702),[55] from which the following extract, dated the 35th year of Charles II (1683), is taken, give us further information :—

"John Crowther and his wife Ellenor, Thomas Bramhall, doctor in physicke and his wife Mary, versus Henry Leigh, Richard Leigh, John Case and Thomas Cooke. Lease of a capital house situate in Little Wootton (Lancaster) commonly called Lee or Ormes. Tenement with lands belonging made by Sir Gilbert Ireland late of Hutt (Lanc.) knight, and his wife Margaret, to Edward Aspinwall of Toxteth Park, Lancaster (late father of plaintiffs Elinor and Mary) and the last will and testament of Dame Margaret Ireland aforesaid, widow of Sir Gilbert Ireland," etc. (Mrs. Elinor Crompton, wife of Thomas Crompton, clerk, and formerly wife of Edward Aspinwall, is mentioned.)

Gilbert Aspinwall succeeded to Hale in 1675, upon the death of Sir Gilbert Ireland. The following notes add to the information given in Gregson's pedigree regarding him: Marriage Licences issued by the Vicar General to the Archbishop of Canterbury, 1660-1679[56] : "1672, May 9. Gilbert Aspinwall of the Inner Temple, Esq., Bach., about 25, and Mrs. Mary Bushell, of Hackney, Midx., Spr., about 18 : consent of father Edward Bushel, Merchant : at Hackney, or St. Leonard's, Shoreditch."

The registers of that fine old church, St. Helen's, Bishopsgate,[57] contain records of the baptism and burial of their first child : "Baptism. 1674, Dec. 5. Elizabeth, d. of Gilbert Aspinwall, Esq., and Mary his wife." "Burial. 1675, Sept. 13. Elizabeth Aspinall, Mr. Bushell's Grandchild, in the church in the South Ile under the Stone with brasse round aboute it."

Edward Aspinwall was the next in succession. The registers of St. Nicholas' Church, Liverpool,[58] record that he was christened there in 1676 : "Edward, s. of Gilb^rt Aspinwall of ye Parke, Esquier. 1 Aug. 1676." Edward Aspinwall and Mary his wife made a settlement of the manors of Hale and Hutt in 1698.[59]

Ireland Aspinwall was admitted to St. John's College, Cambridge, in 1721.[60] His life was not a long one, and he died in 1733. His will is preserved at Chester. He was the last of his name to own Hale Hall, which passed first into the Green family through the marriage of his sister to Isaac Green, and afterwards to the Blackburne family. There is an interesting little volume entitled Hale Hall, written by Harriet E. Blackburne, and published in 1881 ; and a good description of the place, with some capital views, is given in the Victoria History of Lancashire.

The preceding records contain the data from which have been constructed the two pedigrees of the family set forth on pages 244 and 245. The earlier one is of three generations, and covers the period 1260-1357; the second is of fourteen generations, commences about the time the first ends, and may well be continuous with it. No evidence has been found to prove that Hugh of Aspinwall was a son of Adam of Aspinwall (circa 1304-1357) however, and two distinct pedigrees have therefore been given.

It will be seen above that the arms of the Aspinwall family are Per pale Gules and Azure, two bars dancetté Erminois. In a note upon the Lathom family, Gregson says:[61] "The family of Lathom was of great note in the County at an early period after the Conquest, and most probably followed or were retained by Theobald de Walter (sic), afterwards Butler, who bore—Or, a chief indented, Azure; this naturally leads us to conclude that there was some family connection. It certainly was the custom of the times to take arms alluding to, or nearly like those of progenitors, patrons and commanders."

A comparison of the Aspinwall shield with those of other families of the neighbourhood shows that it has something in common with the shields of Theobald fitz Walter, Lathom, Burscough Priory, and Tarbock, also given by Gregson. The shields of the Scarisbrick and Hurleton families appear to be of quite different composition. This information is given for what it may be worth.

The continuation of Gregson's pedigree will be found to be distinctly interesting. It shows that Isaac Green and Mary Aspinwall had three daughters, the first of whom died young. The second daughter, Ireland, married Thomas Blackburne, who was High Sheriff of Lancashire in 1763. He was grandfather of the John Blackburne of Orford and Hale, whose genealogy traced "maternally through the families of Green and Aspinwall from the ancient and knightly family of Ireland" (as Gregson has it) has supplied us with the pedigree already quoted.

The youngest daughter, Mary, married Bamber Gascoyne, Esq. The Westminster Abbey registers[62] contain the record of the marriage, and appended is a note: "1757, Jan. 21. Bamber Gascoyne, Esq., of St. Clements Danes, and Mary Green of Childwall, in the County Palatine of Lancaster, both single. He son of Sir Crisp Gascoyne, Kt., Lord Mayor of London in 1752, by Margaret, daughter and heir of John Bamber, M.D., of Bifrons, in Barking, Essex, and was baptized at All Hallows Staining, London, 22 February 1724-5. He matriculated at Oxford, from Queen's College, 21 Oct. 1743, but appears to have taken no degree. He became a distinguished M.P. and politician, and was Receiver-General of H.M. Customs. He died at Bath 27 Oct., and was buried at Barking, Essex, 7 Nov. 1791. She third and youngest dau. and coheir of Isaac Green, of Childwall Abbey and Hale Hall, co. Lanc., Esq., by Mary, daughter and heir of Edward Aspinwall, Esq. She died 8 May 1799, aged about 69, and was buried at Hale, [61] Gregson: Portfolio of Fragments.

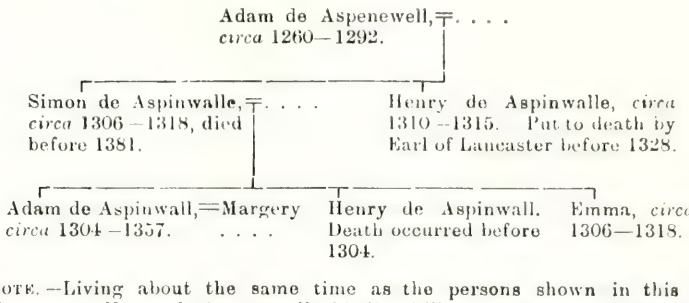
co. Lanc. Their granddaughter was mother of the present Marquis of Salisbury."

Lodge's Peerage shows that James Brownlow William, second Marquis of Salisbury, assumed the name of Gascoyne by sign-manual upon his marriage with Frances Mary, daughter and sole heir of Bamber Gascoyne, Esq. The marriage took place in 1821, since when the family name has been Gascoyne-Cecil. The Marquis of Salisbury who was three times Prime Minister was their son.

PEDIGREE No. 1.



NOTE.—Living about the same time as the persons shown in this early pedigree were Henry de Aspenewell (1246); Gilbert de A. (circa 1288—1332); John de A. (death occurred before 1315); Richard de A. (1318); and Robert de A. (1339). No evidence has been found to enable us to fix their places in the pedigree.

A GENEALOGICAL AND HERALDIC HISTORY OF THE PEERAGE AND BARONETAGE. By [the late] Sir Bernard Burke, Ulster King of Arms, and Ashworth P. Burke. Seventy-eighth Edition, 1916. London (Harrison & Sons, 45, Pall Mall).

This well known and popular book continues deservedly to hold the first place among modern works on the Peerage. The enormous increase in the creation of hereditary titles in these days, when on every New Year's Day and whenever His Majesty happily completes another year of life, it is considered necessary to make numerous additions both to the Peerage and Baronetage, must indeed throw a heavy burden upon the Editor, and this year his labours have been greatly augmented by the incidents of the War. Yet the work continues to be kept wonderfully accurate and up to date. Though the patent by which a Viscounty was conferred on Field-Marshal Sir John French had not passed the Great Seal when the proof sheets were sent to press, his pedigree is to be found in the Appendix, which here precedes and does not follow the body of the work. This Appendix also contains the descent of Mr. Kemeys-Tynte, in whose favour the Barony of Wharton has been terminated since this year commenced. This is taking time by the forelock indeed! We may here perhaps be permitted to remark upon the large increase in recent years in the number of Baronies by Writ which have been called out of abeyance. One cannot help wondering if this liberality in the revival of ancient and forgotten dignities is one of the fruits of the Parliament Act! It would seem that some definite rule should be laid down in this matter, and that a Barony should not be called out, as it too often now is, in favour of a co-heir who possesses but a few drops of the blood, and none of the territorial possessions of the ancestor first summoned to Parliament, but only where some real representation can be established.

We are glad to note the disappearance of many of the picturesque myths with which the pages of Burke used to abound, but there is still room for improvement in this respect. The Editor has often attempted to cover his responsibility by some qualifying words, such as "according to an ancient manuscript," or "this family is said to be descended," etc., but the fabulous story is still set forth. The supposed descent of the Feildings, Earls of Denbigh, from the Counts of Hapsburg, which was so ably disproved by Mr. Round many years ago in this magazine (N.S., x, 193), the derivation of the Wakes from Hereward the Great, which has long been abandoned by common consent of genealogists, and the even more absurd paragraph which derives the most illustrious of all English families, the Howards, Dukes of Norfolk, from the same Saxon hero, all these fables and many more still remain.

Instances of exaggerated antiquity of male descent occur under "St. Davids," where Maximus, King of Britain and Emperor of Rome, is claimed as an ancestor, and under "Grace," where the present baronet is derived in direct male line from Odo, Count of Champagne, and collaterally from William le Gros, Earl of Albemarle. In other cases there are long gaps in the pedigrees, one instance may be sufficient. Under "Maryon-Wilson," we are told that "William Wilson was chaplain and Chancellor to William I.; there is then a hiatus until 1525, and the regular descent does not begin until 1589. On the other hand some of the pedigrees could be carried much further back in the male line with perfect truth, as for instance that of Viscount Ridley, the head of an old Northumbrian house. Many of the Scottish baronetcies commence only with the first baronet, though nearly all of them are of ancient descent. Again it is difficult to understand why the younger branches of some families are set out in the most minute detail, while in other cases there are strange omissions. To give one instance out of many, in the pedigree of Lord Forester no particulars are supplied relating to Captain Francis William Forester, who is a cadet of the house and senior co-heir to the extinct Dukes of Cleveland.

Under the heading "Creations," given at the foot of the articles, there are some errors which should be removed. Under "Norfolk," the Earldom of Arundel is said to be held "by possession of Arundel Castle only, without any creation." This is contrary to what was laid down by the judges in the claim made to the Earldom of Berkeley in 1861 (see Complete Peerage, new edition, p. 232), and the Earldom is, as is well known, held by a parliamentary and not by a feudal tenure. Under "Pembroke" four baronies in fee are allotted to Lord Pembroke, two of which were never in existence, one is extinct, and to the other Lord Pembroke is not even a co-heir.

The armorial illustrations vary greatly throughout the volume. Some of the new plates are much more heraldic in character than the old, but they sometimes have the demerit of not being nearly so easy to decipher. In some cases it is necessary to read the blazon before it can be ascertained what the charges are. As an example the ancient arms of the Percys in the coat of the Duke of Northumberland may be cited. Notwithstanding that it is duly recorded in the text that the Dukes of Albany and Cumberland have been removed from the Roll of the Order of the Garter, their heraldic achievments are still surrounded with a garter bearing the famous motto of the Order. Eight Peers (including Lord Morley of Blackburn) and no less than twenty-two baronets are left altogether without arms in this work, while sixteen other Peers (not Life Peers) have no supporters to their arms.

In conclusion, attention may be drawn to the excellent key to the work, which is quite a feature of Burke's Peerage, and by which all cadets of a noble house, or of a baronet's family, and their wives, widows and daughters, together with all persons belonging to any order of knighthood, can be at once identified, and their place in the book ascertained.

THE MELLARDS AND THEIR DESCENDANTS. By Aleyn Lyell Reade. (Privately printed at the Arden Press.)

This is a handsome quarto volume, well printed, well bound, well illustrated and well written. It contains matter of great interest not only to the families concerned but to all genealogists as well. The author is well known for his former genealogical work. We recall with pleasure his account of the Reades of Blackwood Hill, in which he gave a full and minutely accurate account of Dr. Samuel Johnson's ancestry and connections.

The most ancient record cited in this book is not two hundred years old; yet the family history is so well handled and arranged that a deep interest is thereby created in it. There is no heraldry and no claim to it. The story is that of thousands of other families who, in similar ways, have emerged from obscurity and taken a higher place in the drama of life. Everything must have a beginning, even the social success of families. One reads in other books with bated breath of the time when the Somersets, the Howards and other great English families, were looked upon as upstarts in the social world. In this book we have a similar account of family origins. There were evidently struggles in the early days and much hard work in offices and workshops for those who had a part in the making of the family fortunes, and fostering the intellectual ability of the present and last generations. A family which includes such literary persons as Dinah Maria Mulock, the author of "John Halifax, Gentleman"; Edward Burton Penny, the translator of Boehme's works; and his wife (Miss A. J. Brown), the writer of stories which were popular and widely read in the reign of Queen Victoria, has a right to boast of eminence. More remarkable still are the marriage alliances which enabled various members of the family to rise above their early social surroundings. In 1805, the founder of the house of Bibby married a daughter of the founder of the house of Mellard. The Bibbys, subsequently, intermarried with the Hesketh of Meols Hall, the Battyes—a family of distinguished soldiers—the Brocklebanks, Corbets, Wormalds, Stanley Clarkes and Brazier Creaghs.

The illustrations are numerous and well produced. An especial word of praise may be given to the reproduction of the family portraits and to the pretty picture of Mrs. Craik's (Miss Mulock) beautiful house at Shortlands. The whole book, apart from its genealogical interest, gives thought and encouragement to the ambitions and points one way, at least, to fame and social success, the way of determined industry.

THE MONUMENTAL INSCRIPTIONS IN THE CHURCHES AND CHURCHYARDS OF THE ISLAND OF BARBADOS, BRITISH WEST INDIES. Edited by Vere Langford Oliver, M.R.C.S. London (Mitchell Hughes and Clarke.)

Mr. Oliver, whose monumental history of Antigua is so well known, has added yet another contribution to our knowledge of West Indian genealogy. These inscriptions were copied by him two years ago, and supplement considerably the collection printed by Captain Archer in 1875. The most numerous and interesting of them are those in St. Michael's Cathedral, relating as they do to some of the best families in Barbados, as well as to numerous Englishmen who were employed in the military and civil government of the Island, or travelled thither for the purposes of trade. Many of the monuments have arms engraved upon them and give valuable information as to parentage and place of birth. Among the more important may be mentioned the inscriptions to the second Lord Clarina (d. 1810); Lt. General Sir William Myers, Bart., Commander in Chief of the Leeward Isles (d. 1805); Captain Robert Beckles, merchant (d. 1682); Colonel Edward Chamberlaine, Member of Council (d. 1673); Edward Crisp, merchant (d. 1679); Robert Hooper, Attorney General of the Island (d. 1700), sprung from an old Wiltshire family; Alexander Irvine, founder of Free Masonry in Barbados (d. 1743); Lt. Col. John Merring (d. 1710); John Pilgrim, Member of Council (d. 1715); and also a marble slab erected to the memory of three children of Edward Lascelles, a Barbados merchant, who was a direct ancestor of the Earl of Harewood. There are also inscriptions to several prominent American families, such as Almy, Badcock, Rainsford, Lee, Harris and Sansum. At St. Mary's Church, Bridgetown, and also at St. James', Hole Town, are monuments to the well known West Indian family of Alleyne, and at All Saints Chapel are inscriptions to two baronets, Sir Thomas Graham Briggs (d. 1887) and Sir William Gibbons (d. 1760).

In several of the churches and churchyards are touching memorials erected by their fellows to officers and men of regiments quartered in the Island, who fell victims to yellow fever. At the end of the volume are about 100 inscriptions from the Jewish burial ground at Bridgetown, most of them being in Portuguese. There was a large Hebrew colony in the Island, and many of the descendants of these Jews came to England.

The Editor has added some valuable notes taken from various sources, such as the Island parish registers, Wills in P.C.C., and extracts from the Barbados Mercury, the Gentleman's Magazine, and Caribbeana. On p. 87 appear entries from the parish registers of St. Michael, 1650–1769.

It is satisfactory that these valuable inscriptions have now been placed beyond risk of destruction by the violent hurricanes which so frequently visit the West Indies.

PARISH REGISTER SOCIETY OF DUBLIN. Volume xii. MARRIAGE ENTRIES FROM THE REGISTERS OF THE PARISHES OF ST. MARIE, ST. LUKE, ST. CATHERINE, AND ST. WERBURGH, DUBLIN, 1627–1800. Edited by A. E. Langman, B.A. (Printed for the Society by William Pollard & Co. Ltd., Exeter.)

The Parish Register Society of Dublin perseveres in its determination for the present to print only Marriage entries in parish registers ; it is much to be hoped that this decision will not hinder the printing of Baptisms and Burials at some future time. Of the four parishes now chosen, the registers of St. Marie's have been printed from 1697, when the district was separated from the parish of St. Michan, to 1800. The entries here relating to the aristocracy of Ireland are very numerous and include nine peers, or eldest sons of peers, and as many baronets, besides the Bishops of Ossory and Cloyne. In 1754 two brides, "Miss Delap of Abby street" and "Miss Ludlow, Batch^{lrs} Walk," are left without their respective bridegrooms.

The marriages at St. Luke's are from 1716–1800, and those at St. Catherine's 1715 to 1800. The earlier Marriages at the last named Church have been already printed by the Society in Volume v. There is a gap in these Registers from 1788 to 1792, but this has been supplied by means of the Returns to Visitation. In 1720 a marriage here is recorded to have been celebrated "by lycance and by Father Rivers," a unique instance, we believe, of mention in a Protestant Register of a marriage having been performed by a Roman Catholic priest. Prefixed to the transcript of the Marriages at St. Werburgh's, 1704–1800, are some earlier weddings taken from a manuscript in Trinity College, Dublin.

To the list of curious Christian names given by the Editor in his Preface, that of "Temptus" on p. 83 may be added.

As is usual in the volumes issued by this Society, a most satisfactory index has been provided.

Notes and Queries.

Rev. Robert Dent.—I should be grateful for any reference between 1715 and 1725 to the Rev. Robert Dent, B.A., of Queen's College, Oxford. He was born at Crosby Ravensworth in 1688 and ordained at York, 1712-13. He was presented to Kirklevington in 1727, to Sockburn in 1729, and to North Otterington in 1732; and he died in 1752. I have all the information that can be obtained from the Registers of those places; but I am anxious to discover the entries of his marriage (to Jane ——) about 1715, and of the baptism of his children (John, c. 1718; William, c. 1724; and others), which are probably to be found somewhere in the North Riding of Yorkshire or in the South of Durham.

Lord Redesdale and the Harleian Manuscripts.—The following is a good instance of the loose way in which men of talent and education write when dealing with matters genealogical. Lord Redesdale's interesting "Memories" a work which deserves to live, if only for its graceful appreciation of King Edward VII., contains the following passage at p. 11 of vol. i.:—

"Cuthbert (Mitford), who in the sixth year of Edward the Sixth was, with Anthony Mitford of Ponteland, Commissioner for the inclosure of the Middle Marches. This said Anthony was a rogue. Cuthbert Mitford by his first wife, Ann, daughter of one Wallis of Akeild, had one son, Robert, and three daughters: failing that son Robert, Anthony of Ponteland would become Lord of the Manor of Mitford, and heir to all Cuthbert's estate. To achieve this end he hatched a plot seeking to prove that there had been no marriage between Cuthbert and Ann Wallis, and that in consequence Robert was illegitimate. He contrived to have his contention entered in the Harleian MSS. and to have Robert described as nothus natus—base-born, but when he presented the document at the Heralds' College, it proved to be signed only by himself. On investigation, the lie was nailed to the counter, Robert's legitimacy was fully proved, and his arms were certified without a difference."

Does Lord Redesdale really imagine that the Harleian MSS. existed throughout the ages as a sort of Memoranda Roll for the officers of Arms? The document in question must have been a Visitation of the County of Northumberland, or a copy thereof, which subsequently found its way into the collection of manuscripts preserved at the British Museum, known as the Harleian MSS. I have not enquired into the marriage of Cuthbert Mitford and Ann Wallis, but one would think that Anthony must have had something to go upon, and probably the union, though valid at common law, was regarded as void by the ecclesiastical authorities on account of some technicality.
